That's a somewhat indirect effect on student life. For something more direct, imagine having (gasp) to pay for the Collegian. If you've ever wondered what the Board of Student Publications elections mean, they fill five student-elected seats of a board of 10 that oversees this newspaper, the Royal Purple and the Campus Directory. Two other seats are appointed by President Jon Wefald, and three more are representatives chosen from the three Student Publications Inc. departments: the Collegian, RP and advertising department. There's also a chairman who doesn't vote unless he's breaking ties, and that's your board.

Well, Student Senate would like to change that. It has proposed a bill that will give Student Publications Inc. its privilege fee money (taking off the 15 percent the board said it already could live without) if it removed the three publications representatives from the board and also removed Todd Simon as the chairman of the board. (He's perfected the stunned expression of an embarrassed parent — he has two law degrees and provides sage wisdom even when the board runs on full-bore lemming mode, obviously too dangerously knowledgeable to remain.)

Now, running for any position on campus, including the Board of Student Publications, doesn't require a qualification check of any nature except, of course, popularity necessary to get elected, and with the candidate glut, even that doesn't apply. Sometimes the only requirement for election is a heartbeat.

One would hope that, with three positions filled in a manner comparable to the Kansas Lottery and two seats chosen by presidential fiat that the board would need some contact with the publications it was representing.

While Student Senate might think that holding a privilege fee hostage is an acceptable way to mandate change, don't expect the board to capitulate and plead to Senate for its money. A far more likely scenario at this point would be for Student Publications to become financially independent — sounds great, doesn't it? No more fees for those muckrakers in Kedzie Hall.

And then you have to shell out a quarter for each copy of the Collegian.

Don't expect to find newspapers left under chairs and in hallways anymore. Sure, you could always peruse the Electronic Collegian, if you can find a computer open in a public lab on campus. But circulation will be cut, quality will suffer, and quite frankly, there are some days you just don't want to pay for a Collegian. Not even the cows know where this leaves the Royal Purple.

That's why Senate is important; it brings us to crossroads such as these. If Senate feels obliged to recommend change, that's fine. Put the fiduciary-responsibility gun down and we'll talk. Otherwise the students get shafted, and nobody wants that. At least, I don't.

Long before cat met dog or nitro met glycerine, Collegian met Senate, and there was great frothing. I've tried to keep the faith for the past year that eventually the fires would die, clearer heads prevail, and cooperation (or at least coexistence) take center stage. That doesn't seem possible anymore, and the student body as a whole will suffer for it, be they aspiring journalists or just students looking for news, information and diversion.

So do me a personal favor. Run out to the K-State Student Union and cast your votes for people who put their responsibilities to the student body ahead of vendetta and personal agenda. The fall turnout was embarrassing. Let's try harder this time. And just in case you think your vote doesn't matter, save your quarters; you'll need them.

Reader sings the blues about snowy weather

"It's Good To Be King"
(Sung to the tune of Tom Petty's "It's Good To Be King")

It's good to be king and have your own school What's 15 inches of snow when you make the rules?

If you live in a house that sits on a hill People will love you so do what you will

It's good to be king and never cancel class who cares if the students want to kick your ass?

Oh, all hail the king
who does nothing

It's good to be king
and not have to drive
Why would six inches of ice endanger peoples lives?

It's good to be king or a regent on a board You're above everybody maybe even the Lord

It's good to be king
Bill Graves wouldn't know
He doesn't have his head up his ass

Oh, all hail the king
who does nothing

repeat, next year, repeat, etc.

Employees treated unfairly during snow, reader says

Editor,
As a classified employee of K-State, I am questioning the decision to have classes on Monday and to require all K-State employees to report to work. The governor of Kansas gave a statement to the press asking that only essential state employees report to work. All non-essential employees were told to stay home.

As I understand it, a statement was made by university administration stating that the Kansas Board of Regents' decision to have classes superseded the decision made by the governor. Therefore, all K-State employees not reporting to work would be required to use their accrued leave or take leave without pay.

My question is this: Because the classified employees of K-State are in the Kansas Civil Service and are appointed as state of Kansas employees, how does the regents' decisions take precedence over the governor's?

Unclassified faculty and staff members and student employees are considered regents appointees, but the classified employees are not.

In fact, there are two separate holiday schedules followed at the university: one for classified employees — the state of Kansas holiday schedule — and the other for unclassified employees — the K-State holiday schedule.

How can the university administration require state of Kansas classified employees to use their accrued leave when the governor has stated that they are not to report to work unless they are essential employees? I understand that unclassified employees would be required to take leave if they did not report to work, because they are in fact regents employees.

I believe the university should adjust its statement and allow classified employees who did not report to work on Monday be granted the administrative leave the governor indicated they would receive.

Olajuwon, McDyess suspended for throwing punches in game

HOUSTON — The Houston Rockets faced the hot Utah Jazz without Hakeem Olajuwon, Kevin Willis and Mario Elie on Monday night.

All three were given one-game suspensions for a fight with a Phoenix Suns player on Saturday.

Olajuwon was suspended and fined $10,000 for initiating the brawl by throwing a punch at Phoenix's Antonio McDyess. McDyess was suspended and fined for retaliating by throwing punches at Olajuwon. He will sit out Phoenix's home game Monday against the Los Angeles Clippers.

Elie and Willis also were suspended one game each and fined $2,500 apiece for leaving the bench during the fight.

The altercation took place with 2:08 remaining in the fourth quarter of Saturday night's game at Phoenix, won by Houston 108-89.

"We're down to nine brave men and not too many big ones," Rockets coach Rudy Tomjanovich said before the game against the Jazz, who took a six-game winning streak into the game.

Judge postpones hearing date of NBA player accused of rape

NEW YORK — A hearing on statutory rape charges against Charlotte Hornets' forward Anthony Mason was postponed Monday after prosecutors and the defense agreed they both needed more time to prepare for the case.

Mason is now scheduled for an April 7 hearing, Queens District Attorney spokeswoman Maureen Moore said Monday.

The 31-year-old Queens native and his cousin were charged last month with statutory rape and sexual abuse of 14- and 15-year-old sisters.

Prosecutors and detectives said Mason and his cousin, William Duggins, 24, an unemployed construction worker, met the girls during a benefit basketball game at York College in Queens. They are accused of engaging in unspecified sexual activity and sexual intercourse during the drive to Duggins' home in Queens and during a party at the house.

Mason, who played for the Knicks before being traded to Charlotte in 1996, was in town visiting family during the NBA All-Star break.

Pete Rose to visit Reds' camp to watch son try out for team

SARASOTA, Fla. — Pete Rose has a batting cage at the Cincinnati Reds' complex named after him, and his son is one of the team's minor leaguers.

Still, baseball's career hits leader can expect no preferential treatment when he visits camp Wednesday.

Rose, now banned from baseball, is coming to watch his son, Pete Jr., take part in drills. The Reds say their former star and manager will not violate major league rules by showing up.

"He'll be treated just like any fan," Reds managing executive John Allen said. "Fans are allowed to watch minor leaguers work out, and he's no different than them. He'll just get no special treatment above and beyond Joe Fan."

Baseball has no problem with that arrangement, spokesman Rich Levin said.

"Anywhere a fan can go, he can go," Levin said Monday.

Rose, 56, agreed to a lifetime ban from baseball in August 1989 after a gambling investigation. He has been denied a place on the Hall of Fame ballot because of the ban.

Rose Jr., who reported to the City of Sarasota Sports Complex with the remainder of minor leaguers on Sunday, said he and his father are flattered by the Reds' decision to name the covered batting cages after him.

"I got chills walking by it this morning," Rose Jr. said. "He's happy about it, and he's looking forward to seeing it. I told him that it looks really nice."

Rose Jr. made his major league debut last season, and his father attended the game in Cincinnati.

WBC boss defends decision of controversial Chavez match

MEXICO CITY — WBC president Jose Sulaiman on Monday defended the judges' decision of a draw in the super lightweight title fight between Julio Cesar Chavez and Miguel Angel Gonzalez.

The result of Saturday night's bout between six-time world champion Chavez and Gonzalez was perhaps satisfying only to promoter Don King.

With a draw also in the shortened undercard strawweight unification bout between WBC champion Ricardo Lopez and WBA titleholder Rosendo Alvarez, King already was planning two rematches.

The draw in the main event sparked angry jeers from the crowd, which fired water bottles and seat cushions toward the ring. "Robbers!" they shouted.

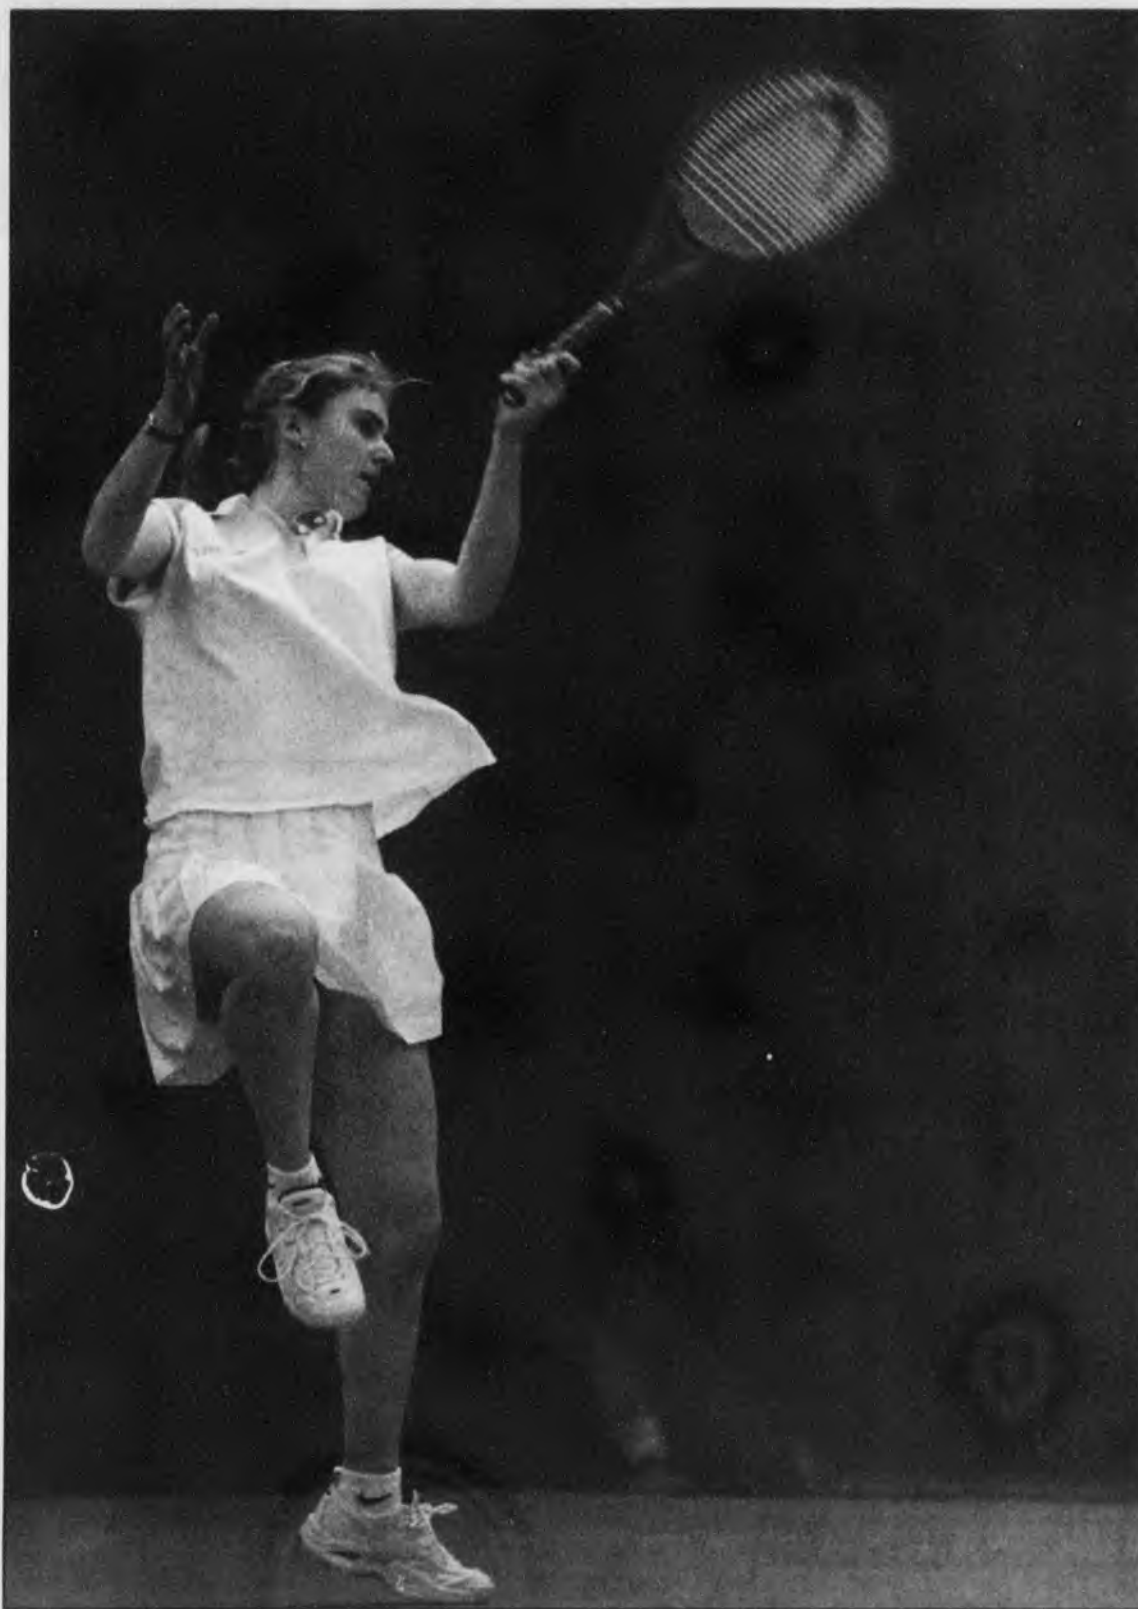

But Sulaiman rejected any alleged wrongdoing.

"Of course I reject it," he said. "I agree with the decisions that they gave. I believe they were just."

Judge Terry Smith of the United States scored it 115-114 for Chavez, Larry O'Connell of Britain favored Gonzalez 116-114 and U.S. judge Chuck Hassett had it as a 115-115 draw.

Chavez said the rematch would be June 6 in Los Angeles, Los Vegas or Culiacan.

The strawweight fight was stopped after seven rounds when Alvarez accidentally butted Lopez, opening a bad gash over his right eyebrow. At the time, the scoring was 66-66, 67-64 for Lopez and 68-63 for Alvarez.

CHASING GOLIATH

► K-STATE CAME CLOSE TO NO. 14 BYU BUT DIDN'T HAVE ENOUGH TO BEAT THE COUGARS.

JOHN STOUS
Kansas State Collegian

The day after picking up its first Big 12 win, a default over Iowa State, the K-State women's tennis team lost a tight match Monday to 14th-ranked Brigham Young, 6-3.

The loss to BYU at Cottonwood Racquet Club in Manhattan dropped the Wildcats to 4-6 on the season, but the team did get some positives out of the match.

K-State's only nationally ranked player, 94th-ranked senior Yana Dorodnova, turned in another stellar performance, defeating BYU's No. 1 singles player, No. 10 Holly Parkinson, 6-4, 6-2.

Dorodnova improved her dual-match record to 8-1 while beating a ranked opponent for the fourth time this season.

K-State coach Steve Bietau said Dorodnova's win was not a surprise, and he was pleased with her performance.

"It was a great win for Yana," he said. "She has been playing extremely well and used her serve more effectively. She got a lot of easy points coming from behind her serve."

The other two Wildcat victories came in the doubles half of the match. K-State's No. 1 team of Dorodnova and senior Lena Pilipchak came from behind 7-4, and won its next five games to defeat Parkinson and Adrien Jenkins, the last two coming in a tie-break.

K-State's No. 3 doubles team of senior Dinah Watson and freshman Anna Pampoulova held on for a victory after a late comeback by BYU's Brooke Levens and Shari Smith.

In unsuccessful bids for victory, the Wildcats' No. 3 and 4 singles players, freshman Eva Novotna and Pilipchak, took their Cougar opponents to three-game sets before losing.

Bietau said K-State played better than it has lately but did not credit the improvement to the eight days between its last match and the one against BYU.

"We played much better than we have, and our scores indicate that," he said. "Not to take anything away from our girls, but if rest were a factor, it would not have been from us not playing. It would have been lack of rest on BYU's team, since this was the third match on their road trip."

While Bietau said he was pleased with the team's performance, he said the Cats still could have played better.

"We improved," he said. "I think if we would have played better, we would have won today."

K-State's next match is Saturday when the Cats travel to take on Big 12 rival Texas Tech.

Big 12 coaches upset by Tournament seeds

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Big 12 got a No. 1 seed in the NCAA Tournament, but after that things were pretty grim.

The next-highest seed after top-seeded Kansas in the Midwest was eighth-seeded Oklahoma State in the South. Oklahoma was the 10th seed in the Midwest and Nebraska is the 11th seed in the West.

Kansas is certainly the class team of the league, and Coach Roy Williams thought his team got what it deserved.

"There was no big dramatic thing because I felt we would be a No. 1 seed, especially after winning this (Big 12) tournament," Williams said Sunday after the Jayhawks defeated Oklahoma for the conference postseason title.

Kansas (34-3) will open in Oklahoma City on Friday against Prairie View A&M, Texas.

Oklahoma State coach Eddie Sutton said he did not like his team's seed.

If the Cowboys (21-6) win a first-round game Friday against Radford in Lexington, Ky., their second game likely would be against Duke. The Blue Devils finished the regular season ranked No. 1, although they lost to North Carolina in the finals of the ACC Tournament on Sunday.

"They really didn't do us any favors," Sutton said of the Selection Committee. "I really thought we'd get a seven. That's about what we deserve. When I look at the other seven, I still feel that way."

Oklahoma State probably dropped in the eyes of the Selection Committee after a one-point loss to Texas in the Big 12 Tournament.

"They always say those tournament games don't mean very much, but apparently they do," Sutton said.

Oklahoma coach Kelvin Sampson thought the Sooners would get a boost by being the second seed in the Big 12 Tournament and reaching the championship game against Kansas. Oklahoma played the Jayhawks close for about 30 minutes before Kansas went on a 23-6 run to win 72-58 Sunday.

Suspensions should wait until after convictions

OK. Here we go. A Collegian column about Manny Dies, the greatest player in the history of this year's men's basketball team.

He found his game this year and led the Wildcats to the National Invitational Tournament. But he's being treated like a tool.

He's being used when he's convenient, and when he's not needed, he's sitting on the shelf collecting dust.

He's being kicked around like a soccer ball because of his recent arrest for obstruction of legal process and transporting an open container of alcohol. He's paying the price for the charges.

Of course, he sure hasn't been found guilty yet. And Dies, an American, should receive the same rights and privileges as everybody else.

Maybe he shouldn't have put himself in that situation. But then again, maybe he didn't put himself in that situation.

While he's waiting for due process, though, he shouldn't be punished.

K-State's first game after Dies' arrest came against Texas A&M on Feb. 25. Dies sat at the end of the bench in street clothes. He wasn't injured. The Cats won by 15, leading from wire to wire, and he wasn't needed. He just sat there watching dust build up on his shoes.

The Cats played again at Missouri on Feb. 28. Again, Dies watched in street clothes. He wasn't injured. The Cats lost by 30. They never really stood a chance during an emotional Senior Day. He wasn't needed. He just sat there growing a beard.

K-State's next game was against Colorado in the first round of the Big 12 Tournament. Dies watched from the bench, but this time he was dressed in his uniform. This was the Big 12 Tournament — lose once, go home and probably miss the NIT.

This game was a must-win. And there was Dies, sitting on the bench, cheerleading for the third straight game. He was available, but only as a last-hope backup plan. Not too smart of a coaching move, considering Dies, still an innocent man, leads the Cats in scoring and rebounding.

The Cats won by 14, and Dies, again, played zero minutes, doing nothing but handing water bottles to his teammates.

Game four came in round two of the Big 12 Tourney against Kansas. Again, Dies sat there, waiting in his uniform as a last-hope backup plan. When Kansas jumped out to a quick 8-0 lead, Dies finally got the call.

Dies, still an innocent man, finally played for the first time in four games. From the time Coach Tom Asbury called on Dies, the Cats outscored the Birds 61-60. But it was too little, too late, and it was only two minutes into the game.

Dies, who averages 16.1 points per game, scored only 11 against the Jayhawks. If he would have played the previous three games, he would have been a little less rusty. He would have started, too.

The unnecessary suspension prevented that, though. And the Cats lost by seven. But hey, they outscored the Birds from the time Asbury finally called on No. 4.

Talk about bad decision making — not only was Dies' suspension the wrong thing to do to a man who hasn't been convicted of anything, but it might have cost the Cats an upset win over Kansas.

The suspension was also out of line, judging by the Cats' handling of other players this season. On Dec.

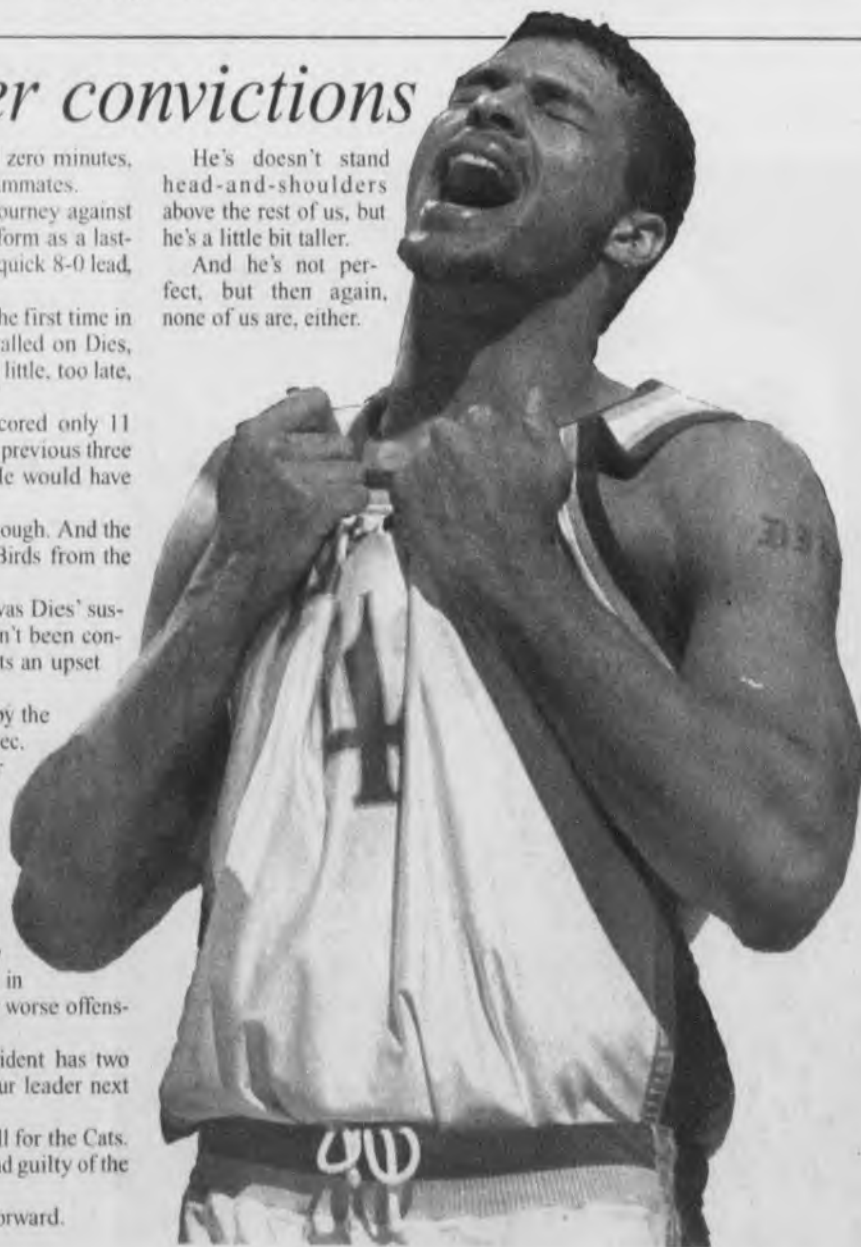

7, Cat point guard Duane Davis was arrested for DUI, and he failed to take a breath test. He was suspended for one preseason game, clearly a lighter punishment than Dies, who sat out two Big 12 Conference games and a Big 12 Tournament game for lighter charges.

Also, the allegations against Dies, although unacceptable if true, are no worse than the daily smatterings in the Collegian's police blotter. Day in and day out, K-State students are charged with far worse offenses.

One of the candidates for student body president has two DUIs. He's still running, though. He could be our leader next year.

But Dies wasn't good enough to play basketball for the Cats. He should have played, though. And if he's found guilty of the charges he faces, he should still play.

He's not a role model, but he's a good power forward.

UFM sponsors program to mentor Manhattan teens

More info?

Because of the growth of the program, more mentors are needed — especially men. If anyone is interested, please contact Linda Teener at 539-8763.

K-STATE STUDENTS VOLUNTEER TO HELP MANHATTAN TEEN-AGERS IN TROUBLE WITH LAW, SCHOOL.

KELLY REDDING
Kansas State Collegian

Teen-agers in Manhattan now have a new place to turn when things get rough.

UFM is sponsoring a secondary school mentoring program where college students volunteer to be mentors to teen-agers.

Linda Teener, executive director of UFM, said the program serves high-risk teen-agers who have been in trouble with the law or are not doing well in traditional programs, such as school.

"The teen-agers are referred to us from schools, parents, probation officers and the court system," she said. "We offer them a modified mentoring program that is not just one-on-one, but also structured group programs."

She also said the program was designed to help the teen-agers feel comfortable.

"We want to provide them with new experiences and let them have fun," Teener said.

Last semester's activities included a group bicycle ride through nature trails, arts and crafts activities, bowling and pool. The teen-agers also went through a teamwork activity sponsored by the campus ROTC.

This semester, the program is focusing on communication skills, interaction skills and self-esteem. Ryan Bock, senior in political science, serves as a mentor in the program. He said the activities offered this semester are more continuous.

"We are working on thought like a checkbook-balancing activity that deals with interest rates and expenditures," he said. "We will also probably be doing some more skill-oriented activities like resume building and some computer activities."

Bock said he thinks the program works so well because of the small age difference.

"Some adults are very far off," he said. "We are closer in age. We can be authoritative but still be approachable and laid back."

Kati Neises, junior in secondary education, said mentoring has been a good experience.

"We become a friend to the teen-agers and support them," she said. "We can be on their level."

High schoolers visit Salina campus

BRENNIA TALLEY
Kansas State Collegian

High school students had the opportunity to find out what college life is really like by taking an extended visit on the K-State-Salina campus Sunday and Monday during the Day in the Life program.

Roger Steinbrock, sponsor of the exchange, said the program evolved in 1993 and was mirrored off of the College of Agriculture's KSU Experience program and then fine tuned for the Salina campus.

High school juniors and seniors are invited to stay overnight with a host student Sunday and attend classes with them on Monday.

Student Ambassadors are playing hosts to this year's program and plan on conducting a question-and-answer session for the visiting students.

"The students will write down three of their biggest questions at the beginning, and then, during dinner, Student Ambassadors will read the questions and reply to them," said Jon Watkins, president of Student Ambassadors and sophomore in geographic information systems and global positioning systems.

Before students had been assigned their college partners, Kevin Herndon, freshman in airway sciences, expected to be able to help his high school student by accompanying him in his choice of career field.

"I'll be helping out the aeronautical department by showing students around the airplanes and explaining the basic functions of the different parts," Herndon said.

The opportunity to be on campus for a longer time than a traditional visit helps calm fears and enables students to see if K-State-Salina is a potential college for them, Steinbrock said.

He also said he thought that the Day in the Life program has been successful in the past, with more than an 80-percent success rate in enrollment.

Watkins is a product of one of the Day in the Life weekends. He said the weekend is why he is attending the technology school.

"Choosing a college is a scary decision, and basically, Day in the Life makes the decision easy by letting high school students know firsthand how great K-State-Salina is as a college," Watkins said.

Watkins said it is becoming harder to find enough ambassadors to house the visiting students in their residence hall rooms. This year the campus will be host to 36 high school juniors and seniors.

Both Watkins and Steinbrock said that Day in the Life gives students a firsthand opportunity to get to know people and see what the campus is all about.

"A lot of the fit with the campus is relating with other students, and while they are here they'll get the opportunity to experience education before college," Steinbrock said.

K-State prepares for speedy 'Internet 2'

INTERNET'S ROOTS BEGAN WITH COLD WAR, NOW SET TO MAKE HISTORIC CHANGES ALONG WITH K-STATE.

JOHN FRANSON
Kansas State Collegian

At the beginning of this decade, little of the general public knew the Internet existed. Today, it is used by an estimated 50 million people worldwide.

Long before "e-mail" and "World Wide Web site" were everyday terms, however, the Internet was flowing with data.

"Most people nowadays view the Internet as the Web, but the Web is a new phenomenon," said Harvard Townsend, Systems associate of Computing and Network Services. "The Internet per se has been around since 1969. That was when they first started working on it with ARPANET."

The Internet Society, an organization devoted to Internet progress, said ARPANET was created by the U.S. Department of Defense's Advanced Research Projects Agency, or ARPA, as a means of communication capable of withstanding a nuclear attack. Initially connecting computers at four universities, the network operated at 50 kilobits per second — much slower than today's personal computer modems, which can reach 56,000 kilobits per second.

In the late '70s and early '80s, other national networks, including the Because It's Time Network and the Computers and Science Network were created. Soon these were connected to the growing ARPANET.

K-State got wired in 1984 when the Department of Computing and Information Sciences connected to CSNET. One year later, Computing and Network Services set up the first Because It's Time Network connection in Kansas, Ken Conrow, CNS associate director, said.

"It all seemed very amazing," he said. "It was just a whole new world to exchange files and collaborate on papers."

The West Coast-based Because It's Time Network was no model of efficiency. Conrow said he and his associates once joked about the complexity of sending a message to a computer across the hall.

"We could send messages to it, but it had to go all the way to San Francisco and back, so it wasn't necessarily the shortest route," he said.

A faster, more efficient network, the National Science Foundation Network, became operational in 1988. It was more than 30 times faster than ARPANET. K-State connected to the National Science Foundation Network that same year.

Like ARPANET, the National Science Foundation Network grew by merging with smaller networks, and its speed and availability caused an increase in Internet use, Townsend said.

However, the increase was nothing compared with that caused by the World Wide Web.

Created in 1992, the Web allowed users to view pictures online and move between documents on a worldwide network.

"One of the side effects of that is the tremendous increase of traffic and the bottleneck that that caused," Townsend said.

K-State is feeling the effects of that ever-increasing traffic. The university's connection is sorely inadequate, Townsend said.

To help solve this problem, CNS, which manages the data transmission on the campus fiber-optic network, will soon install a third line to the Internet.

However, this is only a temporary solution. The larger problem is with K-State's Internet provider, Verio, which suffers from congestion and outages, Townsend said.

"They just don't appear to have been able to keep up with the growth and usage," he said.

This summer might see an improvement when K-State switches to a different Internet provider, he said. Also this summer,

JILL JARSULIC/Collegian
STUDENTS CAN ACCESS THE INTERNET ALL ACROSS CAMPUS. AN EARLY VERSION OF THE INTERNET ARRIVED AT K-STATE IN 1984.

the Kansas Research and Education Network, which K-State is part of, will be upgrading and connecting to the Great Plains Network.

Townsend said these steps probably won't increase speed to the public Internet but will mean a more reliable connection.

"We're hopeful that it'll be higher quality and less congested and have less problems than what we're having with Verio now," he said.

The Great Plains Network will connect to the Very High Performance Backbone Network Service. Operating at speeds up to 622 megabits per second, almost 13,000 times faster than ARPANET, Very High Performance Backbone Network Service will provide K-State access to nationwide supercomputer centers.

Even though Very High Performance Backbone Network Service does not provide a faster connection to the public Internet, it will increase the speed of the connections in K-State's computer labs and residence halls, as well as dial-up connections, Townsend said.

"Because of the improvements we have to make in order to connect at high speeds to the vBNS, all the users at K-State are going to benefit," he said.

Very High Performance Backbone Network Service will also serve as a temporary connection for the national Internet2 project, or I2, which provides for research projects that require high-speed connections.

"K-State was a fairly early member of the Internet2 consortium," Conrow said. "It's a fairly elite group of memberships."

Before I2 is possible, however, K-State will need funds and permission to access the Very High Performance Backbone Network Service, which the university applied for Jan. 31. The government will pay for $550,000 of the $1 million total cost, Townsend said.

K-State will probably be accepted and should be up on the Very High Performance Backbone Network Service by March of next year, he said.

Box office bombs compete for 'Worst Film' dishonors

CORBIN H. CRABLE

The envelope, please — and the award for the worst film of 1997 goes to — "Batman and Robin."

As a break from the hustle and bustle of the upcoming Oscars, the Hastings Bad Cinema Society, a group of movie buffs, is handing out the awards for the biggest box office bombs of the year. The Hastings Bad Cinema Society was founded in 1978 by Mike Lancaster and Ray Wright, who have been keeping track of annual cinematic blunders ever since.

"Batman and Robin" tops the Worst Film category with five nominations. Its director, Joel Schumacher, was nominated for the Worst Sense of Direction. "Batman and Robin" was also nominated for Worst Sequel, Worst Supporting Actress (Alicia Silverstone, who also received nominations for Worst Actress in "Excess Baggage") and Worst Screenplay.

Tied for second place in the Worst Films category are "The Fifth Element" and "Alien Resurrection."

Each received four nominations. "Fifth Element" director Luc Besson was also nominated for Worst Sense of Direction.

This year the Stinkers decided to live up to the ballot with a new category, Most Unwelcome Direct-to-Video Release. Topping the nominations is "Pamela Anderson Lee's Homemade Porno Video." Enough said about that one.

Other categories include Most Painfully Unfunny Comedy, with nominees "RocketMan" and "Gone Fishin'"; Worst Resurrection of a TV Show, with nominees including "Mr. Magoo" and "Bean"; The Sequel Nobody Was Clamoring For, with nominees including "Speed 2: Cruise Control" and "The Lost World: Jurassic Park"; and even Most Annoying Fake Accent, with nominees including Richard Gere in "The Jackal" and Viggo Mortensen in "G.I. Jane."

What's in store for 1998? Lancaster and Wright have already made their first nomination for "the first bona fide stinker of 1998": "Spice World." Lancaster and Wright expect to view more than 150 movies before the end of the year to make the rest of their nominations.

Those who want to vote on the nominees in each category may visit the Stinkers site at thestinkers.com.

The cost of submitting a ballot is $5, with profits going to the Motion Picture and Television Fund, the Foundation for Fighting Blindness and the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation. The deadline for all submissions is Wednesday. Winners will be announced on the Web site on Sunday. All those who submit ballots are automatically entered in a drawing to win home video copies of the current and past nominees, as well as movie collectibles.

Tour rocks Bottleneck with solid ska sound

PHIL KELLUM
Kansas State Collegian

The Bottleneck in Lawrence was filled with the sweet sounds of ska and rocksteady Thursday night as the Hellcat tour rolled through town.

Running about an hour or so behind schedule, the Gadgets hit the stage and kicked out a 25- to 30-minute set to a hometown crowd.

The band kicked off its set with a fiery version of "Party Girl" and played a large chunk of material from its new album, "At Ease."

The Gadgets sounded really good but were obviously tired after a rough few weeks on tour.

The set closed with "Beautiful Girl," and the boys and girl were gone.

All the way from New York City, the Slackers strode onto the Bottleneck's stage for the third time in about six months and sounded wonderful.

A brand new song, "Moto Citi," was chosen to open the set, and it was a nice slab of ska to get everyone dancing.

Other than that new track, the set consisted of a nice mix of songs from the Slackers' debut album, "Better Late Than Never," and its new one, "Redlight."

As always, trumpeter Jeremy "DJ Mush 1" Mushlin's toasting on "Treat Her Good" was hysterical.

During the last song, "Pedophilia," the horn section walked into the midst of the crowd to deliver a couple of great solos.

The Slackers delivered a solid, energetic set, despite keyboardist/co-vocalist Vic Ruggiero's laryngitis. It made his voice grittier and rougher than normal, which was cool.

After a too-long delay, Hepcat came onto the stage and ruled the crowd. From the opening strains of "Train To Skaville," which is an Ethiopians' cover, to the strains of it closing out the encore, Hepcat was sheer brilliance.

The boys mixed it up with old and new songs, with a surprising emphasis, at least to me, on songs from their debut album.

When they weren't filling the air with glorious harmonies, vocalists Alex Desert and Greg Lee tore up the stage with some hot dance moved to the roaring delight of the crowd.

As usual, the horn section sounded fabulous with its tight, syncopated horn work and solos.

The highlight of the set had to be "Dance With Me," which is by far my favorite Hepcat song.

After almost an hour, Hepcat closed its set with, I believe, "Bobby and Joe" from its second album, "Scientific." I was too caught up in the show to really remember.

After much chanting and foot-stomping from the crowd, the nine members of the band came back out and delivered a three-song encore starting with "Miss Congeniality" and closed with a bit of "Train To Skaville."

It was an incredible set, but it seemed to me that keyboardist Deston Berry was incredibly bored and wanted to be doing anything but playing.

Thursday night was an incredible night for ska in Lawrence. Three of the nation's top ska bands played for a full house, and if you missed it, you better not miss any of these bands next time they roll through the area.

K-State students part of open house plans

► STUDENTS HELP ORGANIZE MEDIA CAMPAIGNS, EXHIBITS FOR CAMPUS AWARENESS.

MIKE BURGESS
Kansas State Collegian

Students fill a key role in planning the All-University Open House.

Pat Bosco, associate vice president and dean of student life, said his office has been coordinating open house for 19 years, and students have been involved the entire time.

"It's actually their open house," he said. "They are the heart and soul of the open house program."

Sara Throne, first year student in veterinary medicine and open house student coordinator, said the core committee consists of her position and four subcommittee coordinators from entertainment, special projects, student life and public relations subcommittees.

She said some of their responsibilities include organizing news media campaigns, bringing in mascots, athletes and the band, organizing the student life exhibitions in the K-State Student Union, and coordinating the "lost volunteers" and information booths.

Bosco said the open house is a big event.

"We have about 2,500 student, faculty, and staff volunteers that help present a slice of K-State to prospective students and their families," he said.

David Hensley, senior in life science and entertainment subcommittee coordinator, said the core committee makes sure that all of the groups have access to everything they need to help coordinate the open house.

"Basically, we bring organization to the whole event. In doing so, we make the public more aware of the campus groups and organizations that are here at K-State," he said.

Throne said her goal is to expose as many people as possible to what K-State has to offer and to let current students learn more about K-State. She said working on open house is a great opportunity for career exploration.

"Most college students change their majors while they are here, and this is an opportunity for them to find their niche," she said.

The core committee members are part of the All-University Coordinating Council, which consists of about 40 faculty, students and staff who represent each college, as well as the Department of Facilities, Hale Library, Department of Housing and Dining Services, News Services and Student Publications Inc., she said.

Throne said the most difficult thing she encountered in working with the students was finding a time to meet.

"Most of the people involved in open house are very busy with other things and are very involved, so it is hard to find a time when all of us can get together," she said.

She said this is her second year coordinating the open house and everything seems to be running smoothly and on track.

"All of my core committee has done it before, so they are more sure of what they need to get done," she said.

Bosco said it is such a large event that they have already begun planning next year's open house.

Supreme Court refuses to accept appeal of Florida affirmative action program

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Supreme Court, increasingly skeptical of efforts to give minorities special help without proof of discrimination, refused on Monday to revive a Florida county's affirmative-action program for awarding construction contracts.

The court, without comment, turned away Dade County's argument that discrimination in the local construction industry is severe enough to justify an effort to aid black-owned companies.

The court also declined to hear an appeal by a minority contractors' group that sought to reinstate portions of similar programs in Dade County for companies owned by Hispanics and women. Monday's actions were not decisions and therefore set no national precedent.

The justices have strictly limited affirmative-action programs in state and local public works projects since 1989, saying such efforts must be narrowly tailored to remedy the effects of past discrimination.

However, a lawyer for the minority contractors' group said people should not give up on trying to meet that strict legal standard.

"We know there is discrimination and that it's unfortunately alive and well," said Thomas F. Pepe, who represents the Allied Minority Contractors Association. "It's just that it's very difficult to prove discrimination."

With the proper research on the continuing effects of discrimination, it is possible to win court decisions upholding affirmative action programs, Pepe said.

"The construction industry and municipalities need some guidance," said Bob Cuevas, assistant Miami-Dade County attorney. "The standard is strict, but it should be somehow meet-able."

In 1995, the Supreme Court said federal programs that aim to help minorities must meet the same strict standard required of state and local governments.

The high court also has restricted the use of racial considerations in drawing election districts, while lower courts have cut back on affirmative action in public university admission policies.

But the Republican-led Congress has not done away with every federal affirmative action program. Last week, the Senate voted to keep a 15-year-old federal program that helps women and minorities win highway construction contracts.

In another affirmative-action case Monday, the justices rejected the appeal of a former Nevada college professor who said she was discriminated against because she is white.

Yvette Farmer said the University of Nevada, Reno, unlawfully hired a black sociology professor before her and paid her less when it hired her later. The university said the black professor was more qualified.

In other action, the court:

—Agreed to decide whether police need a search warrant before peering through a gap in window blinds to detect possibly illegal behavior.

—Ruled that federal copyright law does not protect companies that export their products from having them shipped back by another firm for sale in the United States.

—Set aside a Baltimore man's conviction for a 1993 beating death, ruling he was denied a fair trial because a co-defendant's confession was read to the jury.

The Florida case involved affirmative-action programs adopted in Dade County for black contractors in 1982 and for Hispanic and women contractors in 1994.

The plans set goals for awarding county contracts. The goals could be met by setting aside some contracts for bidding solely by minority-owned firms, requiring contractors to give work to minority subcontractors, or by other measures.

Six construction trade associations challenged the plans in 1994, saying they violated the Constitution's guarantee of equal treatment.

A federal judge ruled that Dade County did not provide enough evidence to support the need for the program. The 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals agreed, adding that the county improperly used such remedies as a first resort instead of considering neutral measures such as simpler bidding procedures.

The county's Supreme Court appeal addressed only the plan for black-owned businesses. It said they tend to be smaller and less experienced because of discrimination — not for race-neutral reasons.

The minority contractor group's separate appeal said the six trade associations should have been allowed to challenge only the parts of the county's programs that directly affected them.

CLASSIFIED AD WRITING TIPS

► List items or services first. Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Study blames smoking for Medicaid cost

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BERKELEY, Calif. — Smoking-related illnesses are costing taxpayers $12.9 billion a year in Medicaid expenditures, according to a report released Monday that makes a state-by-state analysis of the tobacco toll.

The report, which the authors say is the first comprehensive look at expenditures in all 50 states and the District of Columbia, supports state claims against the tobacco industry.

It also raises questions about the adequacy of a proposed settlement according to which tobacco companies would pay $368.5 billion to 40 states over 25 years.

The $12.9 billion figure, drawn from 1993 data, does not include federal Medicare payments and private insurance smoking-related expenses, said Dorothy Rice, professor emerita at the University of California, San Francisco, and a report co-author.

"I want to alert people to the high costs of smoking and the enormous amount that the Medicaid program has spent," Rice said.

Medicaid is a federal-state program that helps pay for health care for the needy, aged, blind and disabled, and for low-income families with children. It covered an estimated 38.7 million people in 1997.

Medicare is the federal health insurance program for people aged 65 and older, and for the disabled.

Leonard Miller, a University of California, Berkeley, professor and lead author of the report, suggested that any settlement should be tied to whether smoking rates go up or down, with the industry being made responsible for the rates.

In Washington, D.C., tobacco industry spokesman Steve Duchesne did not comment directly on the report. But he said attempts to expand the proposed settlement won't work.

"The industry under the June 20 proposed resolution has agreed to pay $368.5 billion and that's all there is," he said.

The settlement, now being considered by Congress, provides for unprecedented restrictions on cigarettes and on tobacco makers' liability in lawsuits. The industry will fund anti-smoking campaigns, use bold health warnings on packs, curb advertising and face fines if youth smoking doesn't drop enough.

The first of the 40 state lawsuits seeking to recover Medicaid money spent on smoking-related illnesses is being tried in Minnesota. Texas, Florida and Mississippi have settled their cases.

The report released Monday noted a relationship between smoking rates and Medicaid smoking-related expenditures.

Nevada, which led the states with 19.2 percent of its Medicaid dollars going to smoking-related care, also had the highest smoking rate in the nation (30.3 percent). Smoking rates cited are from 1993, the year the report is based on.

On the other end of the scale, the District of Columbia, which devoted 8.6 percent of its Medicaid budget to smoking-related costs, had a smoking rate of 18.2 percent.

Alumni project to involve campus input

the next meeting on April 2.

Dennis Law, dean of the College of Architecture, Planning and Design and committee member, said it's important this project and others like it be brought to the committee.

"I think there are political reasons a project like this should come to this committee," Law said.

"It would take some heat off of the decision-makers."

Throughout Livingston's presentation, he stressed that the architect's renderings, model and plans he presented were only in a conceptual stage. He said there could be many changes and that some issues, such as how many parking spots will be included in the center's lot, are still unresolved.

Like the press conference on March 3 at the Alumni Association offices at the KSU Foundation building, Livingston outlined his firm's programming and design strategy for the center. After his presentation, Livingston answered questions from the committee about the project.

Referring to his firm's design approach, Livingston said, "The main thing the Alumni Association instructed us to do was to not make it look like Memorial Stadium — not to make it look like a castle. That came out of the feasibility study."

The Alumni Association hired a consultant during the past year to perform a feasibility study of the alumni center for fund-raising purposes. The results of that study determined such things as the projected cost and how the building should look.

"Limestone was a prerequisite. A pitched roof was preferred. It should also reflect other buildings on campus without reproducing them," Livingston said.

Questions from the committee ranged from why the building did not look more like Memorial Stadium, why it doesn't act as a gateway and whether the prominent site on Anderson Avenue will add to traffic congestion.

Hayter also brought up the subject of the site, but sensing the committee was not concerned with the site selection history of the center, the subject was not discussed.

Many committee members were interested in the leasing terms of the site, because the Alumni Association is a private entity.

Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, said the footprint of the building will be leased to the Alumni Association.

He said that while the site would be developed as part of the project, the university would maintain the parking lots and landscaping.

Rawson said the parking spaces for employees of the center would be regulated through Parking Services.

In other business, the committee was informed by Rawson that David MacFarland, associate professor of journalism and mass communications, would join the committee as a community representative. MacFarland was one of the most vocal opponents of the city of Manhattan's plans to widen Anderson Avenue.

The committee will also expand by two or three when members from the Faculty Senate Committee on University Planning will join.

any skin grafts."

Marci Maullar, associate professor of theatre, said Hines had a singing part in last fall's production of "Man of La Mancha." Hines was cast in an upcoming production of Shakespeare's "The Tempest," but had to be replaced because of the accident, Maullar said.

David Littrell, director of the KSU Symphony Orchestra, said Hines is second-chair second violin in the orchestra. Hines had to miss Thursday's orchestra concert, and was obviously disappointed, he said.

"She's very conscientious," Littrell said.

Hines said she has two rows of stitches from the top to the back of her head. She said she was thankful that none of her hair had to be shaved.

"A doctor came in to give me the 'Is she insane?' test," she said, which involved asking her questions to test her mental acuity, such as naming the U.S. president.

"I was really tempted to just say 'Daffy Duck' and mess it all up," she said. "My parents were there, so I didn't. I was good."

She said she probably couldn't have answered the questions involving math problems in her head if she hadn't been hit by a car.

"I'm a musical theatre major. I can't divide in my head," she said.

Hines said she will spend a few more days at Kansas Rehabilitation Hospital to work on her leg, and regrets not being able to stay on the cast of "The Tempest."

She said she was amazed at all the support she's received so far from K-State students and faculty. Fellow orchestra members signed a concert poster and sent it to her, and most of her professors and the passengers in the car that hit her have called or visited her in the hospital.

The K-State Choir sent Hines a floral arrangement, even though she isn't part of the choir.

"My room's like a flower garden — you walk in and it smells so beautiful," she said. "The people at K-State are so wonderful."

High school student journalists fight censorship bill

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — High school student journalists Tuesday urged defeat of a bill they said would let school administrators censor their stories, but two principals said the measure can help ensure responsibility in student publications.

The clash of opinions came before the Senate Education Committee. It had its second hearing on a bill that would clarify in a 1992 law that school administrators can set guidelines to require that high standards of English and journalism are used in publishing student newspapers and yearbooks.

Chairwoman Barbara Lawrence, R-Wichita, said a third hearing will be conducted Friday to accommodate others who want to testify.

Chief protagonists Tuesday were Alexis Vanasse, a reporter for the Panther Tales, the student newspaper at Great Bend High School, and her principal, Mike Hester.

Vanasse told the committee stories have been censored from the school paper according to new guidelines that can get articles declared trite, trivial or controversial.

She said her

Hester told a different story. He said student reporters have written stories without calling him or other administrators for comment or verification of facts, and quotes are used, "That we don't know if they were just made up."

"When we try to work with the situation," Hester said, "we get accused of

Union Bookstore's Grad Fair gives chance to buy cap, gown, tassel, announcements

Graduating students can get graduation supplies at the K-State Union Bookstore's Grad Fair '98 in the Union Courtyard until today 4 p.m.

Tena Stoller, graduation coordinator and gift clerk for the K-State Union Bookstore, said everyone has to have the cap, gown and tassel. She said many students also bought personalized announcements.

Students can also get frames for diplomas, college rings, announcements, thank-you cards, wooden desk sets, pen and pencil sets, picture frames, paper weights and clocks.

Julie Colin, senior in family studies and human services, said she liked the graduation fair and the prices were cheaper there than other places she had looked.

"I think it is useful because you can get everything all in one place," Colin said.

Stoller said there are several reasons students might want to purchase their supplies at the graduation fair.

"First, we give specials during the grad fair, so it will be cheaper for students at that time. Second, if they want personalized announcements, we can get them printed up for them in plenty of time so they don't have a hassle getting them mailed out to people on time. Lastly, their parents will be pleased that it is taken care of," she said.

Ethan Erickson, senior in human resource management, said he was glad to get everything purchased now instead of waiting.

"I'm glad to get it out of the way. It is something that I don't have to worry about later on. Instead of piecing it all together, I can get it all here," he said.

Some of the items on sale are the cap, gown and tassel, both personalized and non-personalized announcements, Cross pens, résumé books and briefcases. There are also specials on college rings.

Stoller said, the "Grad to Go" packages have been popular because students can buy everything they need at one time, and they will be available until the day before graduation for students who cannot make it to the fair.

K-State loses blood-raising battle to KU; donations lacking because of sickness

K-State lost the American Red Cross Blood Drive traveling trophy this semester to the University of Kansas. The trophy had been at K-State since October 1995.

K-State collected 536 units of blood during February while KU collected 544 units. However, the total donated throughout the year, 1,415 units, was a five-year high for K-State. KU's yearly total was 1,209.

"It looks like we lost the battle, but we really won the war," Nancy Powell, American Red Cross Blood Services representative for K-State, said.

Mark Barkman, Delta Tau Delta blood drive coordinator, said this is only the second time KU has received the trophy since the Red Cross began the challenge in 1993.

"They only beat us out by eight points," Barkman said. "We had a weak donation because there were many tests that week and a lot of sickness on campus."

Powell said donations were low regionwide because of sickness.

Powell said the Red Cross plans to have next semester's competition on the same week in October for both KU and K-State.

Statistician's speech challenges findings on genetic influence in 'The Bell Curve'

Statistician Kathryn Roeder will present her findings that challenge the book "The Bell Curve," which draws connections between intelligence and social factors.

Her speech, "Intelligence and Success: Is it All in the Genes?" will be at 1:30 p.m. Thursday in Weber 123. Her speech will try to make sense out of statistical information that relates to society, Sallie Keller-McNulty, professor of statistics, said.

"Basically, she disagrees with some of their findings, like heritability," Keller-McNulty said.

Roeder, an associate professor of statistics at Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh, Pa., said "The Bell Curve" assumes genes determine IQ and, ultimately, success.

"Yes, genes influence IQ, but not as strongly as the book suggests," Roeder said. "They say there is little chance to enhance the environment and IQ, but in our book what is called the 'maternal effect' shows that in the womb a child has potential IQ."

Roeder went on to cover the validity of the statements made by the book.

"The Bell Curve" was the most influential book of our generation on social theory. Are these depressing claims true? Will there always be these cognitive elites with the rest of us stuck in a caste system forever? I doubt it," Roeder said.

Roeder's interest in statistical genetics includes discovering locations of disease genes and how heritable a gene is.

Roeder also studies DNA fingerprints to see if fingerprints used in DNA cases are valid.

Keller-McNulty said Roeder will no doubt be an influence in the field.

"She is young, brilliant, and dynamic and will spend her life changing how we all use statistics in our lives," Keller-McNulty said.

Small-scale bomb explodes Sunday night in KU residence hall; 1 worker hurt

LAWRENCE — A homemade bomb that injured a 19-year-old residence hall worker has students at the University of Kansas concerned and the Kansas Bureau of Investigation involved.

A plastic two-liter bottle filled with what university police believe was dry ice and sodium exploded about 9 p.m. Sunday, injuring Kenneth Sisson of Derby, Kan. Sisson had found the bottle in a stairwell at McCullum Hall and was taking it outside when the bottle exploded, KU Police Sgt. Chris Keary said.

Sisson was taken by ambulance to Lawrence Memorial Hospital with eye injuries. He was treated and released Sunday night.

The bottle was sent to the Kansas Bureau of Investigation lab in Topeka for testing to determine the precise substances.

KU police sent out warnings Monday to students to avoid picking up any suspicious packages.

They are still trying to find the person who left the bottle in the residence hall. Keary said police are investigating the incident as a criminal use of explosives.

Actor Lloyd Bridges dies at age 85, leaves behind hits like 'Hot Shots!', 'Airplane!'

LOS ANGELES — Lloyd Bridges, whose half-century in acting ranged from the drama of "High Noon" to the adventure of TV's "Sea Hunt" to the daft "Airplane!", has died, his agent said Tuesday. He was 85.

The tall, craggy-faced, blond actor enjoyed amazing resiliency throughout his career, even surviving the film industry's political blacklist. He also spawned a new generation of actors. Sons Beau and Jeff, who started acting as youngsters on "Sea Hunt," became stars in their own right.

Bridges trained as a classical actor, but he soon learned to be more versatile. He played every kind of role in 25 B movies, starred on Broadway, worked in seven TV series and even appeared in musical comedy.

"Airplane!" in 1980 opened a whole new career for Bridges. As a wacky air controller, he parodied his own movie performances. He followed with such comedies as "Airplane II!" and "Hot Shots!" He also had a well-remembered guest shot on TV's "Seinfeld" as an athletic trainer.

Lloyd Vernet Bridges Jr. was born Jan. 15, 1913, in San Leandro, Calif., near San Francisco.

Besides Beau and Jeff, he is survived by his wife of more than 50 years, Dorothy, a daughter, Cindy, and several grandchildren.

Auction at Justin Hall generates nearly $3,000

► EVENT OFFERS DEALS AT HOTELS, RESTAURANTS FOR BARGAIN PRICES.

JOHN STOUS
Kansas State Collegian

Hoffman's Lounge in Justin Hall seemed like a baseball park with all the steals that took place Tuesday night. The lounge was the site for the third annual Hospitality Auction, sponsored by K-State's Hospitality Management Society.

"We had some excellent values tonight," said Pat Pesci, director of hotel and restaurant management at K-State. "As low as some of the packages sold for, there were some real steals."

HMS, an organization for hotel and restaurant management students, organized the auction as a fund-raising event for its activities. The auction had about 55 different packages up for bid that ranged from meals to lodging. The packages were at some of the nicest hotels and restaurants in the region, in cities such as Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Kan., Kansas City, Mo., Dallas and Wichita.

Amy Remmert, auction chair and senior in hotel and restaurant management, agreed with Pesci.

"There were some real good buys this year, just like in the past," she said. "There was one package worth $300, and it only sold for $80."

Remmert said the auction went well and netted more than it had in the past. "We almost reached $3,000, and it had only raised about $2,000 in years before," she said.

Remmert said she thought the crowd was more diverse than it had been in the past, as well. She also said a survey had been passed out to bidders before the auction to help HMS find out how to make the auction better.

"Some people heard about the auction in their churches, in the Collegian and by word of mouth," she said.

"The survey will allow us to put together a marketing team to help us get more of the community involved next year."

Judy Hawkins, credit registration supervisor for continuing education, said she heard about the auction from a friend via e-mail.

"I just heard about the auction today and think it is great," she said. "The food packages around Manhattan are probably some of the best things on the sale bill for students because they eat at these places, anyway. If they can save five or ten dollars, I think that is great."

Remmert said weather might have kept some people from attending. There were 42 bidders this year.

"We advertised more this year and were expecting a larger crowd, but the weather just didn't cooperate with us too well," she said.

Pesci said that while the auction was successful, HMS is already looking to next year.

"Our sales have gone up around $500 dollars a year, and next year, we are going to use the survey data, which is information on how to better service our patrons," he said.

SUPERNATURAL INDICATIONS

Speaker attempts to explain paranormal phenomena at end of millennium

JOSHUA STURGILL
Kansas State Collegian

Journalist and lecturer Michael H. Brown presented "Science, Prophecy and the Supernatural," an overview of his research and his experience with the paranormal, Tuesday night in the K-State Student Union.

"No matter how much we want to think that the world is merely physical, there's always something going on at the edges of science that we cannot explain," Brown said at the beginning of his lecture.

As a journalist doing research on evidence of psychic phenomena in 1975, Brown said he became convinced there was more to the events he was recording than just "the power of the mind."

Brown followed his interest in the paranormal by looking into reports of psychics, haunted houses, UFO abductions and even reports of vanishing hitchhikers. He said he could see striking similarities in these diverse events.

Because of these similarities, Brown said he began to believe something spiritual and unexplainable was the cause of many reports of telekinesis, UFOs, and in some cases, multiple personality disorders.

"Many psychological illnesses may actually be spiritual maladies, which would explain our low success rate in treating cases," Brown said.

Brown said paranormal activity is not confined to any particular time or place, but there seems to be an increase now — at the end of the millennium.

"Reports of spiritual phenomena are on the rise around the world," he said, specifically in UFO sightings, witchcraft and religious phenomena.

Brown said there was a similar increase of these events in the Middle Ages just before the onset of the plague.

In both cases, there was also an increase in predictions of the Antichrist, the second coming and end-of-the-world scenarios.

"These are indications that something is going on," he said. "Something is coming, and we need to be spiritually prepared for it."

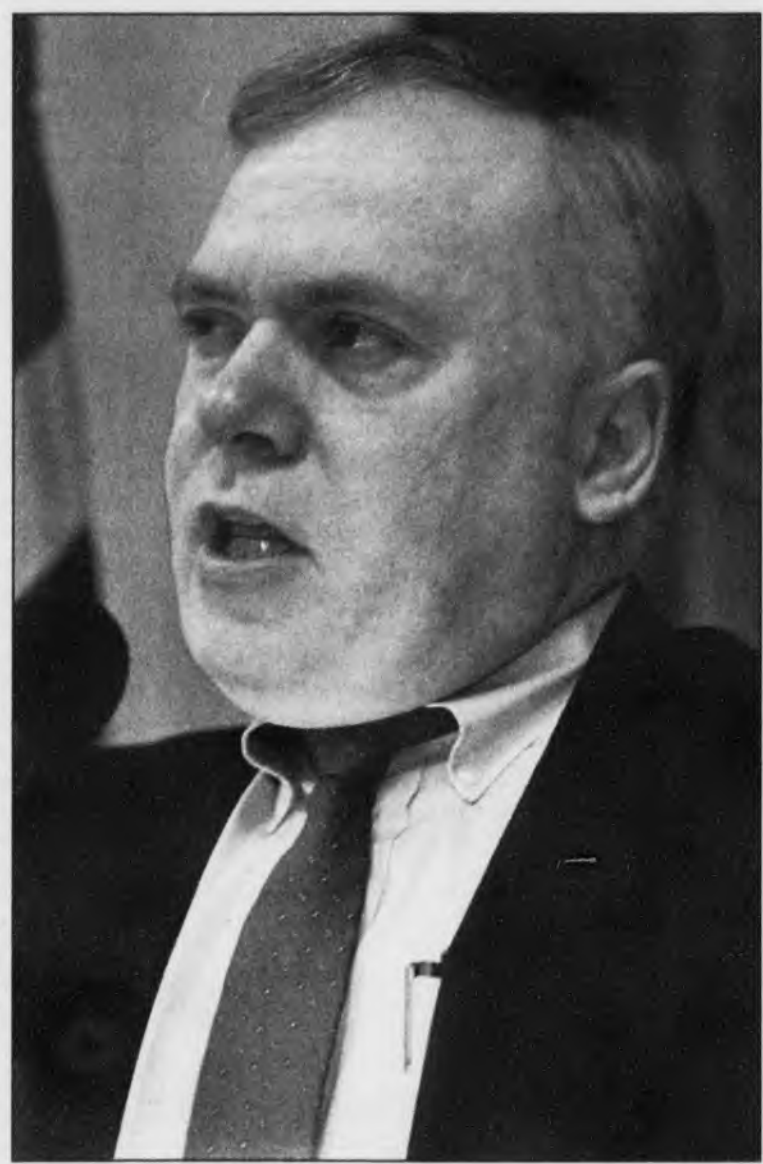

The second half of Brown's presentation was a question-and-answer session focused on Brown's experience with journalism and spiritual issues.

Brown cautioned the audience about getting involved in paranormal research and advised that there are both evil and good spiritual events.

One member of the audience asked about the possibility of conversation with the dead.

"The spiritual realm is complex," Brown said. "It does happen, but often, evil, negative spirits pretend to be the spirits of the dead."

Another audience member questioned the legitimacy of Brown's research and asked why the increase of spiritual activity hasn't been more widely publicized in mainstream media.

JILL JARSULIC/Collegian

JOURNALIST MICHAEL H. BROWN GAVE A LECTURE TITLED "SCIENCE, PROPHECY AND THE SUPERNATURAL" TUESDAY NIGHT IN THE UNION LITTLE THEATRE.

"Focus on the physical makes it easier for people," Brown said. "Journalists are ants about anything that has religious implications."

Brown said materialism in the United States often keeps Americans focused away from the spiritual.

"We make a mistake if we think everything is supernatural, but we make an equal mistake if we think there is nothing but the physical," Brown said.

Brown also discussed avoiding Ouija boards, and said some activities can open people up to dangers they might not want to face.

"Exercise tremendous caution investigating this domain," he said.

Brown emphasized the importance of belief in God and the search for meaning in life and cautioned against seeking the supernatural for its own sake.

He ended the lecture by saying what his experience has taught him.

"We do have a purpose. That should give us hope. Be open to anything that can enrich you."

High school press laws should not be changed

The Kansas Legislature is contemplating a horrible mistake. A bill introduced by Sen. Laurie Bleeker, R-Great Bend, would essentially give high school principals and boards of education the right to edit their students' publications for "high standards of English and journalism."

Last year, students in Great Bend, Kan., attempted to publish several controversial articles in the school's newspaper, Panther Tales. Topics included sexual harassment and a disciplinary policy that favored the sons and daughters of Great Bend's social elite.

Then, Ellinwood High School students, also in Bleeker's district, published senior wills that defamed other students.

Bleeker's legislation changes Kansas law, which allows principals to censor articles that are libelous or obscene. The statutory amendment would give principals the power to revise or correct any articles they feel violate proper English and journalism standards.

The proposed student press legislation is micromanagement. It doesn't encourage schools to hire competent publications advisers with a working knowledge of journalism. It encourages them to hire anyone they want, as long as students' mistakes can be fixed later by administrators.

But more than likely, the legislation isn't aimed at mistakes. It will also target controversial stories that don't cast school administrators or policies in a good light.

By allowing principals to define high standards of journalism, Bleeker's bill takes away freedom of the press. In its wake, the bill leaves a principal's newsletter, which won't be an effective learning tool for students.

It's understandable why Bleeker, a former Great Bend School Board member, would be in favor of such legislation. It will keep her hometown school district out of hot water with patrons, who don't like reading stories about their schools' mismanagement. But government — whether national, state or local — needs a watchdog. And high schools, with effective journalism advisers, are a wonderful training ground.

President Jon Wefald doesn't proof-read stories in the K-State Collegian. If he did, it wouldn't be the same. Controversial but important stories wouldn't appear. High school principals shouldn't be afforded that right, either.

The Senate Education Committee should kill Senate Bill 669, which is no more than Bleeker's political attempt to correct a hometown problem on the state level.

Dumbing down campus architecture

K-State's buildings have degenerated into pale imitations of their original splendor

SHANE FOSBURG/Collegian

K-State is beginning to evoke late period Rome. Aside from the obvious differences in culture, architecture and warring geographical conquests, K-State is in a state, so to speak, of deterioration. We've entered a Dark Age where we've forgotten what it means to build with purpose, to build with the future in mind while also respecting our past. The classic example of the dumbing down of K-State's architecture is the state-sponsored Crumbling Classrooms project. On the surface, the project is worthy enough. Our buildings have become inaccessible fire traps in need of code-approved exits and alarm systems, better climate control and updated classroom technology. No one's going to argue with the installation of a wheelchair ramp on the side of a building.

VIEWPOINT

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

Russell is a fifth-year senior in architectural engineering. You can send e-mail to Russell at rfm@ksu.edu.

What's actually occurring on campus is another question. To install code-approved stairwells, historic wood staircases are being systematically ripped out of campus buildings in the name of safety.

In Kedzie Hall, coffered doorways and a well-proportioned staircase are being closed in by new metal fire doors and cheap drywall. In Fairchild Hall, an old staircase was replaced with an elevator and stairwell that do nothing to match the architectural flavor of what is one of the oldest buildings on campus.

Just walk from the east wing of Seaton Hall to its west wing to experience more than five decades worth of dumbing down from the expansive use of wood and molded high ceilings in the east to concrete bunker construction and artless metal stair rails in the west. No one loves these spaces, and for good reason.

K-State might be preserving selected elements of building exteriors, but we are allowing fragments of our building interiors to be discarded, plastered over and ripped apart. If limestone is the cohesion of the outdoor campus, what, pray, is the cohesive element of the indoor campus?

Yet, in the name of safety, K-State has secured a minimal amount of money — just $32.2 million — to execute a minimal amount of corrective measures. However, some of that money goes to fund the expansion of Ackert and Durland halls. Never mind these mini-projects are destroying building integrity left and right, it had to be done. We should just be thankful our state Legislature cares for us enough to give even minimal amounts of money.

This spending policy is evident of a state that would rather let itself decline slowly over many years and then try to correct it with minimal effort. It's as if 17th-century Romans attempted to revive classical Rome by planting some flowers in front of the Colosseum and declaring it open for business.

If the old buildings on this campus are truly going to be revived, they need a loving restoration. The last time this was done, in the project to renovate Holton Hall, a special allocation of student money was required. Considering the fee climate on this campus of late, student money to renovate anything more than a video game parlor would be unquestionable.

But can we really blame students for an administration that is less than willing to give concessions to them, especially considering the hasty renaming of the old Farrell Library? If students give money to a project, it's out of some necessary duty as a student. If rich alumni give, it's because they are one step below Mother Teresa.

Much of the problem begins with our Scrooge-like Legislature, those brilliant lawmakers just to the east of Manhattan and just to the right of rational thought. Instead of supporting state facilities, they've casually let our state parks fall into decay, our Kansas Board of Regents facilities become substandard and our state historical sites remain as either tacky exploitations or dryly promoted metal highway markers.

The best new building projects in Kansas are undertaken by cities. Topeka will have a new library soon, and Wichita will have an interesting downtown science center. Manhattan's new airport and library are both city projects.

The Legislature doesn't support the renovation of K-State because it views universities as needing one-time infusions of cash for one-time projects. Why invest in infrastructure on a yearly basis, especially if universities aren't viewed as state resources in both intellectual thought and historical significance.

Imagine if the capital in Topeka were allowed to degenerate to the level of Seaton Hall. That would never happen, because Kansans would never stand for it. Apparently, that's not the case with the state's universities.

VIEWPOINT

DAVID FAIRBANKS
David is a senior in electronic journalism. You can send e-mail to David at jollyd@ksu.edu.

My parents would be the first to admit I never listened well. In fact, within my family I've always been known as the guy who forgets things because he doesn't pay attention. Well, I guess I really couldn't disagree with them. However, there are a few bits of advice my parents gave me long, long ago that have managed to stay with me through the years. In fact, I've tried to live my life by them.

The first and most important rule they taught me was the golden rule. You know, the one that says, "Do unto others as you would have done to you," or something like that. It may sound cheesy, but I'll be damned if it isn't the key to a happy existence. Just think of how many wrongs could be avoided if people really tried it.

I'm not talking about making huge changes in the course of history or anything like that. I'm talking about making this world a little bit more bearable for all of us. To me, it's the little things that are a big deal. Like the times you decide not to tip a waiter, or when you slam the door in the face of a Jehovah's Witness, or when you cruise right past a car stuck in the snow. Those are the deeds that cheapen humanity.

Now, I don't really consider myself to be that religious these days, at least not through an established church. However, I do try to pattern my life in a way that will complement my fellow man or woman. I just try to see it like this: If you side-step through life only worrying about yourself, don't expect anyone else to worry about you.

OK, time for the second one. I still remember the first time Pops muttered these words to me: "Fighting isn't worth it unless it's over love or money." I still think the man's a genius.

Following this rule has managed to keep me out of every fight I've ever had a chance to be in. It simply comes down to the fact that every time someone's been in my face, it's been because of something so ridiculously unimportant that I would've hated to waste blood over it. Perhaps if some of the knuckleheads at the bars each weekend actually weighed the importance of a fight before plunging into one, we wouldn't have to see bloodshed over a spilled drink.

Only on planet Earth can a guy get smashed in the face for something so small. Let me elaborate. Some day we'll be visited by little green men. Call it spiritual intuition, but I think it'll happen. Now I'm not necessarily a UFO advocate, and I'm not sure if we've been visited already. But I'm sure the day will come. I'm also sure that if they're advanced enough to make it all the way to Earth, then they've probably got their stuff together. I think it only makes sense that a species so advanced is extremely enlightened as well. Maybe they could give us some badly needed advice.

Sometimes I think about what they'd say when they see how our rude and morally deficient asses behave. I'm sure we wouldn't be able to understand it, but the meaning would probably be something along the lines of, "Damn, y'all are messed up!"

But maybe we will have figured it out by then. Maybe the day will come when we all will have learned to get along and help each other out. Maybe we won't need their help. Oh well, 'til that day comes I'll be kickin' back in my lawn chair on the porch with beer in hand and a sign around my neck that reads, "READY TO BE ABDUCTED." I sure hope they can read English.

So what am I trying to prove with all this hogwash about morals, violence and aliens? Nothing. The point has already been tested and proven since time began. We are an uncaring people. But that doesn't include everyone. I say this because I often come in contact with those individuals who've realized they're not the only being on the planet. I call these people my friends. I sure wish there were more of them.

Exposure to surroundings determines our behavior

MOIRA WICHMAN
Kansas State Collegian guest columnist

Are we more than mere products of our behavioral environment? Is there an ideological process behind our actions that does not manifest itself in our daily activities, yet shapes our essence? I assert that we are manufactured goods, produced by those entities with which we have come into contact — but that it is possible — and necessary — to refine ourselves.

It is amazing how what we do is actually a reflection of who we are. This is shaped by our environment. Not surprisingly, the pastime of comparing humans to their behavioral preferences is practiced by most Americans. From car type to dog choice, fashion decisions to course of study, Americans have identified their behavior as indications of personality types. But are we really "what we eat?"

Changing behavior influences our perspectives. This is a concept that has been discussed in a variety of forms, including handwriting analysis and correction as a means of positively influencing personality traits. I find the following informational tidbits scintillating.

Studies document the following relationships between handwriting style and personality: controlling individuals write with a firm stroke; excitable individuals tend to write jaggedly; shy persons often slant their writing to the left; and, among other traits that will not be mentioned here, the generous (unconsciously of course) employ an upward stroke at the end of their words. The main idea is that one can alter one's behavior through changing one's writing style.

Three years of fascination with the theory that reconstructing one's handwriting style is a means of altering personality traits actually only culminated for me recently. The idea seemed enjoyably esoteric, but it now, disappointingly, makes perfect sense. My handwriting will reflect my state of being. It is not just writing styles that reflect personality characteristics, but also walking patterns and essentially all other behavior. Head angle, shoulder position, posture, arm motion and length, and timing of strides all express our state of being. For example, greater, more regularly paced strides indicate assertiveness or stress; in contrast, a buoyant stride suggests a carefree attitude.

So it is obvious that we reflect our environment (in particular, the behavioral styles expressed in that certain environment), but are we products of it, or is there an essence within that resists external influence? Yes. We are not only "what we eat," or only what we do, or what we read, but we also think.

We all have the potential to monitor our thought processes. Human speech has the unique feature of displacement, the ability to describe that which is not in our immediate physical or mental environment. It enables us to abstract, to communicate about locations far away, to discuss figures in the distant past and to maintain a rich mental environment with news articles, philosophical theories, memories and ideals to pad the rocky journey through potentially undesirable environments.

A few weeks ago, Newsweek had a single article on Iraq, as Clinton's morals were the focus of this special issue. The next week, news stories were carrying reports of Saddam Hussein's "lies": a picture of a suffering woman and child was shown on CNN of "Saddam Hussein's Madonna." Madeleine Albright emotively reported at Ohio State University that the United States cares more about the Iraqi people than Hussein does.

Obviously the issue here is not Hussein's ethics in contrast to those of the United States — all governments must serve their own interests, which is why we supported Kuwait in the Gulf War and why nations belong to NATO and the United Nations — but Iraq's potential for eradicating a large segment of its enemies' populations. News coverage is consistently biased; merely selecting the stories to report is reflecting this prejudice.

Regardless of the situation, there is more than one perspective. What about the malpractices of the United States?

We are products of our environment, but to limit ourselves passively to being shaped by a single, emotional point of view and only to the views of our news media environment are behaviors that reflect who we are as a nation and what is important to us.

Weekend snowstorm should have caused K-State to be closed

Editor,

Please excuse me if I confess to not understanding what happened Monday. The governor declared a state of emergency in northeast Kansas, saying that non-essential state employees would be better off staying home. But K-State remained open. Most schools closed for the day, in large part, for reasons of travel and safety. But K-State remained open.

As of 11 a.m. Monday, about 20 roads in Kansas remained closed, with most others slippery and icy. In Manhattan, the sidewalks to campus were difficult, if not impossible to use, and that included the campus sidewalks. In talking with a Riley County Police Department dispatcher, I was told they had no numbers on accidents, but there were several, and they were continuing to work more. I am sure there has to be some reason why campus could not have been closed for a day — or even a half day — to allow facilities to catch their breath.

Oh, one other thing. Adding insult to injury, some professors awarded extra points to those students who attended their classes. The others, who stayed home for any number of reasons, missed out. That's a nice touch.

Conditions not deemed bad enough to cancel classes at university

Editor,

I am always game for a day off from classes, but to cancel classes on Monday would have been ridiculous. I was shocked that canceling classes was even an option. I thought I was a wimp when it came to winter weather, but now I have seen much worse. I would hate to see the reaction if a real storm hit.

First of all, there is no possible way that 15 inches fell in Manhattan. I have been in storms that left 15 inches of snow, and this certainly was not even close.

I completely agree with canceling tests because I know other places were hit much worse, therefore trapping students. As far as Manhattan is concerned, I drove during the worst part of the storm, and it was no big deal. Sure it was a little slick, but nothing my little Toyota couldn't handle. I do agree that more attention could have been paid to the sidewalks.

So before you start asking for President Jon Wefald's resignation, take a deep breath and realize that this storm was not nearly as big as it has been made out to be. It could have been much worse.

When tornado season comes around it will be your turn to tell me that it is not a big deal!

Senate represented by 2 types of people with different plans

Editor,

I am a Student Senate intern this year. As an incoming freshman, I was delighted to have this honor. I looked at it as an opportunity to become better acquainted with K-State and as a great learning opportunity. It has been just that, only in ways which I had not quite expected. I would like to share with you some of the things I have learned about the K-State Student Governing Association. Throughout my experience it has become very apparent to me that there are two very different kinds of people involved in SGA.

There are those senators and other SGA members who really care about the students and the future of this university. These are the people who really try to obtain representative student input on all issues, despite how they personally feel about an issue. These people are unbiased, because they are there to represent the students not themselves — yet, this is why you attacked Tim Riemann.

These individuals know they are there to represent the students and to help improve our university in any way they can. These senators deserve the praise of the entire student body, because unfortunately in Senate they are fighting an uphill battle. Senate should not have anything to do with politics, because it should be a joint effort of the university. Yet, this is not what happens.

There are many senators who waste Senate time with unimportant and irrelevant questions. There are senators who are there only for their personal agendas and résumé building. It seems to me that there are some senators who would prefer to have SGA be an elitist group, rather than an all-encompassing effort. These facts were evident at Thursday's meeting when graduate students were denied their rights. They still had the right to be heard and to represent their interest.

Never before have I been so mortified by the selfish actions of some student senators. I have been very proud to be a member of the nation's best SGA, but that night I was greatly ashamed that I was part of a body that told people they could not be involved. With elections so very close, maybe we should more carefully consider whom we are going to support. This is not only about a library fee that is greatly needed (sadly, we pay more for parking than our library), but this is about all students being heard and being involved in our student government.

On the issue of elections, there are unfortunately very few students running this year. Maybe instead of attacking the student body president, undeservingly, the Collegian could help focus on a few good things. For example, the hard work that was done on the combining of state grant funds to create more than $10 million extra in higher education funding or the fact that K-State SGA remains to be ranked first in the nation. This is just a suggestion.

SPORTS ROUNDUP

Sports Roundup is a daily dose of the latest scores, stats and news from the world of sports outside of K-State. Compiled from Associated Press reports.

NBA star Malone carries gun after receiving death threat

SALT LAKE CITY — Utah Jazz star Karl Malone intends to carry a handgun on road trips after a death threat he received in New Jersey last week.

"From now on, I'll be packing," he said. The threat came at Continental Airlines Arena last Friday, when Utah beat the New Jersey Nets 122-115. In response, security at the arena was tightened.

The Salt Lake Tribune reported Tuesday that the threat rattled him. Malone, who has a permit to carry a concealed weapon, told the newspaper he has little faith in security at NBA arenas.

"Not until somebody gets shot or something like that — and it's going to happen, I'm telling you — are they going to do something about it," Malone said. "And I'm not going to be one of those 'uh-oh' kind of guys."

Malone's decision poses numerous security problems.

Utah's "concealed carry" law is relatively lax and only one other state — Arkansas — recognizes it. Concealed weapons laws otherwise vary and some states — New York and California, particularly — allow concealed weapons only under the most stringent supervision, if at all.

Provided Malone secures the necessary permits, he would probably require special permission to carry a weapon even on a chartered flight, and he would have to pack the weapon and ammunition separately. Firearms must be declared and securely stowed in the baggage compartment of commercial flights. Some flights ban them entirely.

NBA spokesman Chris Brienza was reluctant to discuss security provisions. The league does limit the number of people permitted to sit behind a team's bench and the number of guards who must accompany referees on and off the court.

"Otherwise, it wouldn't be security," he said.

Representatives at the Delta Center say situations like the one in New Jersey arise occasionally and are handled according to the perceived gravity of the threat. That could mean assigning additional security to work a game or attend to a certain player.

"We treat each one very seriously," said Brent Allenbach, vice president of event services at the Delta Center.

2 women claiming abuse sue Mike Tyson for $22.5 million

BALTIMORE — Two women suing Mike Tyson for $22.5 million were traumatized when he verbally and physically abused them at a restaurant after his sexual advance was rejected, their lawyer said Tuesday.

Tyson's attorney disputed the accusations and said he expected to file a countersuit.

The women claim in their lawsuit that the former heavyweight champ grabbed one of them, cursed at the other one and overturned a table before hot coffee was thrown on him to "impede his attack" March 1 at a Washington D.C. bistro.

Tyson, who served three years in prison for rape, became even more enraged when he found out one of the women is a corrections officer, the lawsuit says.

Tyson adviser Jeff Wald called the claims absurd.

"We think it was a total setup for money," said Wald, who had not seen a copy of the suit. "This guy's like a target for every greedy person out there."

Tyson's lawyer, John Branca, told Baltimore's WMAR-TV the boxer is innocent and witnesses can back him up.

"We're going to be very, very aggressive in pursuing this lawsuit, and a countersuit can be expected," he said. "We're not going to allow Mike to become a target for every woman who wants to extort money from him."

The women, Sherry Cole and Chevelle Butts, appeared at a news conference Tuesday in Baltimore with their lawyer one day after filing the suit in Montgomery County Circuit Court. The women, both 30, did not speak to reporters because they were still "very much traumatized," lawyer A. Dwight Pettit said.

The women are seeking damages for assault, battery, defamation and emotional distress, and they also want to restore their reputations, Pettit said.

"These women were put through a horrendous ordeal, cursed, verbally abused in a situation in front of a fully packed restaurant," he said.

Bears' lineman Spellman has 2nd police run-in in 2 days

CHICAGO — Chicago Bears defensive end Alonzo Spellman, wearing no shoes or shirt in freezing weather, on Tuesday walked out of the hospital he had checked into after an eight-hour standoff with sheriff's deputies.

Officials at Good Shepherd Hospital in suburban Barrington called the Lake County Sheriff's Office when Spellman left, and deputies eventually talked Spellman, 26, into voluntarily returning to his room, said Lt. Gary Stryker.

"The doctors did not want him to leave, he had no shoes or shirt and he was running around in an open area," Stryker said.

"We responded and a deputy had him in his car for a few minutes. He tried to talk him into going back and he (Spellman) got out of the car and walked back to the hospital," Stryker said.

There was no physical confrontation with the 6-foot-4, 290-pound lineman. Several deputies remained at the hospital to assist staff members if needed, but Spellman was not put under arrest and he will not be charged with any offense, Stryker said.

Spellman was admitted to the hospital after Monday's standoff ended quietly with the intervention of former Bears linebacker Mike Singletary, who talked Spellman into leaving the suburban Tower Lakes home of his publicist.

Picture the Big 12 Conference. Now add three more teams, such as No. 2 Kansas, and it's comparable to what Wildcat National Invitational Tournament opponent North Carolina State sees on a regular basis.

The Cats face the Wolfpack at 6:30 p.m. tonight in Raleigh, N.C. NIT pregame starts at 6 p.m. The game will be shown on ESPN.

"They are battle-tested in the ACC," K-State coach Tom Asbury said. "Their conference is so strong. They have two of the top 5 teams within 20 miles — we have one — so that is double trouble."

The Wolfpack has a worse record than the Cats (17-11, 8-10 in the conference) by far — 16-14 overall and 6-12 in the Atlantic Coast Conference. But the ACC is sending eight of its nine teams to postseason play.

North Carolina and Duke are No. 1

seeds in the East and the South, respectively. Maryland, Clemson and Florida State all received NCAA bids, while NC State, Georgia Tech and Wake Forest are playing in the NIT. Virginia is the lone ACC school to sit out the postseason.

Considering that four Big 12 teams are in the Big Dance and two are playing in the NIT, strength of conference seems less than comparable. But Asbury said the Cats don't have time to worry about that.

"Once you are assigned, you think, 'Let's go play.' You can't change anything, and we don't want to change anything," he said. "We want to do well for our conference and come away with a win. That is what you play the games for."

As of Sunday night, when the Cats received the invitation, nothing much was known about NC State except the team was in the ACC and the Wolfpack beat No. 1 North Carolina at North Carolina on Feb. 21. Since Sunday, Asbury said the team has watched some tape.

"They are very aggressive defensively," he said. "They are tough at home. They are big up front and extremely athletic. They are a real quality team. It is going to take a great effort to go down there and beat them."

NC State will also have the home-court advantage, another thing the Cats don't have time to think about.

"You can't worry about crowds," Asbury said. "They play in front of big crowds in their conference, and we do as well. It will boil down to our five against their five."

Players to watch from the Wolfpack are senior guard C.C. Harrison and freshman forward Kenny Inge. Harrison averages 16.7 points and 4.1 rebounds per game, and Inge scores an average 11 points and 7.2 rebounds.

Harrison and guard Ishua Benjamin are the only seniors on the Wolfpack roster. The rest of the team consists of one junior, three sophomores and six freshmen. Asbury said those freshmen aren't freshman players anymore.

"They have won a national championship in the '80s, so they have tradition," he said. "I think they really have a bright future with five freshmen and a sophomore in their top eight."

Sophomore Cat point guard Duane Davis will not see any action this week, Asbury said.

"I don't anticipate getting much out of him, if anything, this week," he said.

If the Cats win the first game, the second round will pit K-State against the winner of the Georgia/Iowa game on either March 16 or 17. If the Cats reach the third round, which will be March 18-20, they will play North Carolina-Wilmington, Wake Forest, St. Bonaventure or Vanderbilt. The semifinals and finals will be March 24 and 26 at Madison Square Garden in New York.

THEY PLAY IN FRONT OF BIG CROWDS IN THEIR CONFERENCE AND WE DO AS WELL. IT WILL BOIL DOWN TO OUR FIVE AGAINST THEIR FIVE.

STUDENT POWER

► WRESTLING COMPETITION ATTRACTS STUDENT COMPETITORS.

CHARLEY MORASCH
Kansas State Collegian

The bleachers in the Chester E. Peters Recreation Center recently filled with anxious fans awaiting the outcome of a true sport.

It wasn't intramural football or basketball though. These student athletes were given the chance to test their wrestling skills on Feb. 19.

Commonly known as arm wrestling, the annual Wrestling Tournament divides contestants based on living organizations, gender and weight.

The women's division consisted of two weight classes, less than 136 pounds and more than 136 pounds. The men's division was divided into four weight categories. Flyweights needed to weigh in at less than 150 pounds; lightweights weighed between 151 and 175 pounds; middleweights weighed between 176 and 200 pounds; and heavyweights could weigh more than 200 pounds.

Weigh-ins were the morning of the tournament at the Rec Complex and prompted some participants to do some last-minute dieting.

"I didn't eat much last night to make weigh-ins," said Marcus Farr, residence hall flyweight champion and sophomore in pre-health professions.

Andy Moburg, residence hall lightweight champion and freshman undecided, also had food on his mind.

"I'm thinking about Pizza Shuttle," he said.

Most matches lasted between 10 and 20 seconds, although a number of quick pins and a few suspenseful matches took place.

One of the most exciting matches happened in the second round. Marty Grusznis seemed overpowered by his opponent and inches away from being pinned.

But as his opponent continually pulled on Grusznis' hand, Grusznis quickly changed the momentum to his favor and soon pinned his opponent.

► K-STATE FOOTBALL PLAYERS PLAY INTRAMURAL BASKETBALL IN SPARE TIME.

SUN DEE MILLS
Kansas State Collegian

Wildcat offensive lineman Brien Hanley holds, slashes and clogs up the middle. No, spring football hasn't started. Hanley and about 12 of his closest teammates belong to an intramural basketball team.

The team, named Twos and Sevens, plays Thursday nights and is sitting pretty with a 5-0 record. Other Cats on the roster with Hanley include wide receivers Darnell McDonald and Everett Burnett, defensive end Darren Howard, defensive back Lamar Chapman, fullback Brian Goolsby and linebacker Da'Von Brame.

Hanley said offensive guard Ian Moses has the title of team captain.

"Actually, I'm the manager and the coach," Moses said. One of the players in the background jokingly threatened Moses with an up-rising similar to the one ex-Golden State Warriors player Latrell Sprewell waged against his coach, P.J. Carlesimo.

"This is just fun," Hanley said, laughing at his teammates. "It's like getting together and playing with my friends."

For the football players, intramural basketball presents much less pressure than football season while allowing the players to compete in sports and get a good workout.

For their competitors that night, Left Turn Headstone, a good workout was one thing the team came away with. They didn't come away with a win, though, as the Twos and Sevens won the game 68-43.

"They're tough to beat," Left Turn Headstone team captain Tyce McMillan said. "But it's just like playing anybody else."

"There's a couple of teams every year," Hanley said. "I didn't play last spring, but a lot of these guys did."

When Left Turn Headstone took a look at its schedule and saw the football players' team on it, Headstone player Mike Berndt said they were ready to be physical.

"We were probably really intimidated by them at first," Berndt said. "But I think we were getting over it in the second half. We started hitting some shots and handling the ball better."

Hanley said that feeling is common from competitors, but Twos and Sevens didn't feel it from Left Turn Headstone.

"Last week, that's how it was with the team we played," Hanley said. "But this week's team we heard was pretty good. So I don't know how they felt."

Don't expect too many plot twists in latest episode of March Madness

Once the dullness of conference tournaments subsided Sunday, the long-awaited announcement of the four No. 1 seeds in the NCAA Tournament shocked about as many people as the Denver Nuggets' most recent road loss. Never have the top four teams stood so clearly head and shoulders above the rest of the field throughout an entire season. At 27-4, only Arizona has more than three losses.

Now that the obvious is a matter of official record, what surprises loom in this year's installment of March Madness? Which region poses the biggest threat to its top seed? Which teams will successfully navigate the road to the Final Four in San Antonio? Which teams are going nowhere faster than a '68 Camaro on cinder blocks? Most importantly, who will be sitting on top of the basketball world 63 games from now?

Here's the answers to these questions and more in a region-by-region analysis. But don't ask for next week's lottery numbers. These powers of prognostication are used solely to do good.

Midwest: The only way this region could be any easier for top-seed Kansas would be if the Jayhawks played all their games in Allen Fieldhouse — well, maybe if they played their games in Bramlage Coliseum, where KU has an even better record in the past decade.

Prairie View A&M, the only team in the field with a losing record, guarantees KU will improve its record to 35-3. To give an idea how bad Prairie View is: If the Panthers were a football team, they would top K-State's wish list of non-conference opponents.

Don't be surprised if: No. 2 seed Purdue fails to reach the Sweet 16 by losing to No. 7 St. John's.

One and Done: No. 12 seed Florida State, who rode the ACC's coattails to the Big Dance.

East: In his first season as North Carolina's head coach, Bill Guthridge has a chance to win half as many championships as Dean Smith won in 35 years. Antawn Jamison sealed his selection as National Player of the Year with his 22-point, 18-rebound performance in the Tarheels' 83-68 thrashing of Duke during the ACC final.

Indiana, a loser in four of its past five games, somehow earned a No. 7 seed. The Hoosiers looked good in Friday's loss to Purdue — that is, they lost by less than 56, and they should beat Oklahoma and advance to the second round for the first time since 1994.

Don't be surprised if: Xavier, a No. 6 seed, upsets Connecticut in the regional semifinals.

One and Done: Princeton, which faces the red-hot Runnin' Rebels of UNLV in round one.

West: The biggest yawn of a region features defending champion Arizona, which has struggled lately. Beyond the Wildcats lies a second-tier field with Cincinnati, Utah and Illinois.

No. 4 Maryland owns impressive wins over KU and North Carolina, but Arizona is too strong and too experienced not to emerge from the left coast unscathed.

Don't be surprised if: Arkansas and Temple — not Cincinnati and Utah — meet in the Sweet 16.

One and Done: Tennessee, which won't be able to contain the talented front line of Missouri Valley champion Illinois State.

South: By far the toughest region to pick, the South contains not one but two viable threats to No. 1 Duke. The Blue Devils have only lost three games all season — two to North Carolina and one to No. 3 Michigan. The Wolverines have been hot lately, but No. 2 Kentucky has been on fire all season.

Since 1980, at least one ACC team has reached the Final Four in all but three years. In 1998, only one ACC team will go, and it won't be Duke. Look for Tubby Smith and the Kentucky Wildcats to be the only non-No. 1 seed in San Antonio.

Don't be surprised if: UCLA falls in the first round for the second time in three years when it takes on the Miami Hurricanes.

One and Done: One-man show St. Louis, which meets a Massachusetts team on the rebound.

Eyes on the Prize: The difference between Arizona's team this year and Arizona's team last year is the giant bull's eye on each Wildcat jersey. Lute Olson's bunch can't sneak up on teams like it did in 1997.

Kentucky will make its third straight Final Four appearance, but it has simply lost too many NBA-caliber players to win it all. North Carolina is tough, and the 'Heels have more talent than anyone in the nation, but they lack a dominant center to complement their excellent one-through-four men.

That leaves the Jayhawks, the Buffalo Bills of college basketball. Actually, they're more like the Kansas City Chiefs — the Bills have at least made it to the big game lately. Raef LaFrentz is peerless among college centers, Paul Pierce is the deadliest inside-outside threat in the nation, and together they form the game's finest one-two combination. If KU's guards can continue to play error-free basketball, look for the Jayhawks to topple North Carolina in the final on March 30.

The clock is ticking.

Football players shoot hoops in offseason

After the game, Left Turn Headstone felt tired.

"They've got quickness," Berndt said. "They full court press you every time. And they make a lot of space when they post you up."

Height is something else Twos and Sevens has a lot of, McMillan said.

"That extra 10 inches will help you every time," he said.

At Jeffersonville High School in Jeffersonville, Ind., Hanley, who stands at 6 feet 3 inches and weighs in at 325 pounds, was a starter for three years.

After reaching state finals his sophomore year, he won the state championship team his junior year.

At the state finals, which had five players now competing at the Division I-A level, in scoring with a 19.2 average. He was the star of that game, rebounding a missed free throw and hitting the game-winning shot.

His team returned to state his senior year but did not win. But Hanley's 19.8 points, 7.1 rebounds and three assists per game helped the team finish 22-3 and earned him a place on the Indiana All-Star team.

Hanley's success made him a highly touted basketball recruit, and Xavier University picked him up. At Xavier, he did not play as a freshman. Once he transferred to Coffeyville Community College to play football, his basketball career was over.

"It was nice to play, but I was burnt out playing competitively," Hanley said. "That's why I quit in the first place."

Hanley said most of the players on the intramural team played some basketball in high school, but he named some that he considered having skills.

"Well, I guess I have some skills," he said. "But so does Darnell, Darren and Lamar."

who angrily stormed away from the stand.

"I was thinking I was going to lose, but he kept on jerking, and I figured I could push him back on the rebound," Gruszis said. "He wouldn't even shake my hand."

Although matches varied, most contestants' reasons for competing did not.

Farr said he entered the event to have fun.

"It's just a game. There's nothing really too big to worry about," he said. "You've gotta have fun. I was a little nervous, though. You never want to lose."

Enrique Avila, the residence hall middleweight champion, seconded Farr's opinion.

"I'm just doing it for fun," he said. "I wasn't even going to sign up for this, but my R.A. convinced me, so here I am."

With no controversy surrounding matches or calls and good sportsmanship displayed most of the time, Intramural Director Steve Martini said the tournament was a success.

"I thought it went pretty smooth," Martini said. "It's always a nice event."

AIDS vaccine could develop in 10 years

HARVARD DOCTOR ENCOURAGES TESTING POSSIBLE AIDS CURES ON PATIENTS ALREADY INFECTED WITH DEADLY VIRUS.

JENNIFER LUCKE
Kansas State Collegian

Dr. Richard Marlink, executive director of the Harvard AIDS Institute, spoke Tuesday about the need and possibility of finding a cure for the virus that causes AIDS.

Marlink said the drugs being used offer hope but are not the answer.

They are beyond reach for most of the developing world, where 90 percent of HIV-infected people live.

President Clinton set a goal to obtain an AIDS vaccine by 2007.

"The consensus is that we can do this," Marlink said. "It is no longer a question of whether we can develop an AIDS vaccine, it is a question of when."

Marlink said dramatically expanding human testing of safe vaccines that have already been discovered is a key to finding a vaccine.

"We do have vac-

virus,"

Marlink

said.

possible safe vaccine, but further testing was halted in 1994.

Marlink said researchers do not need to wait to better understand how or why vaccines work. They should concentrate on getting the product out in the market for people to use.

One day people will be able to make the sad calculation of how many millions of lives could have been saved if it weren't for the halt in testing, Marlink said.

Marlink said another key to finding a vaccine is to launch a national campaign. The campaign would have an organizational structure similar to those with proven track records in delivering product and achieving specific goals.

Marlink cited the March of Dimes, which funded the search for a polio vaccine, and the United States Armed Forces, which quickly finds vaccines for viruses infecting those in combat, as examples of leads to follow.

The final step that needs to be taken toward obtaining a vaccine is to vastly expand international vaccine trials, Marlink said. Vaccines developed in the United States and other developed nations should also be tested in developing countries.

"It's the right thing to do," Marlink said.

The numbers of AIDS patients in the United States is dwarfed by the numbers in developing countries.

The United States has hit a plateau, while rates in developing nations are still rising.

"An AIDS vaccine is really their only solution," Marlink said.

Marlink said researchers should not create a vaccine that will only prevent the subtype of HIV-1 found in the United States, but one that will cure strains of the virus found in other areas of the world.

"We can only gain information about other subtypes through international collaboration," Marlink said.

British Embassy official to discuss policy changes

SHERYL WILLIAMS
Kansas State Collegian

Simon McDonald, first secretary of the British Embassy in Washington, D.C., will speak at K-State Today.

Jeff Pickering, assistant professor of political science, said McDonald will talk about the special relationship between Britain and the United States.

He will also discuss Britain's new government.

"The new government is the first Labor government in almost two decades," Pickering said.

"Prime Minister Tony Blair has made a great number of changes, but he hasn't changed that fundamental cornerstone of their foreign policy, the special relationship with America."

Pickering said he thought Simon would also discuss current events, such as the British stance on the situation in Iraq, Britain's decision to opt out of the European Monetary Union's move to create a single currency and ongoing peace talks between Britain and Northern Ireland.

"Tony Blair just invited Gerry Adams, the leader of the Irish Republican Army's political wing, to the negotiating table for the first time, and that's raised a lot of eyebrows," Pickering said. "It's the American equivalent of dealing with terrorists."

McDonald, a British foreign service officer for the past 15 years, was a speech writer in the 1990s for Douglas Hurd, former British foreign secretary. He will speak at 2:30 p.m. Today in Denison 113A.

STEVE BALDERSON IS THE WRITER AND DIRECTOR OF "PEP SQUAD," A MOVIE HE RECENTLY COMPLETED THAT WAS FILMED IN WAMEGO AND MANHATTAN. BALDERSON RAN ADS IN LOCAL NEWSPAPERS TO CAST ROLES FOR HIS MOVIE.
IVAN KOZAR

Manhattan, Wamego set stage for film

AMY MILLER
Kansas State Collegian

Steve Balderson had a simple reason for filming his movie "Pep Squad" in Manhattan and Wamego last summer: his budget.

Balderson, who grew up in Manhattan, left film school in Los Angeles and returned to Kansas to make his movie because the locations were cheaper to use than those in California.

"12th Street Pub ... let us film there for nothing, and we got to close down the street for nothing," he said. "If we did that in L.A., it would cost like $25,000 just for that one day, and we would have to go through a month of paperwork."

"The entire budget of the film was set for half a million, and had we filmed it somewhere else we would have gone over that," he said.

Balderson, who wrote and directed "Pep Squad," said it's the story of a group of high school students who have been stepped on their whole lives and are now fighting for change. It's also about one girl who will stop at nothing to get the prom-queen crown.

The majority of the movie was shot in Wamego, where the crew was allowed to take over the town, even stopping traffic on a federal highway to film.

"In Wamego, they basically let us believe it was our back lot," he said. "We had complete free reign over every single building and every street."

Rosemary Crilly of the Wamego Chamber of Commerce said the movie crew received permission from Wamego High School, the city and the county for scenes filmed at the school and in the streets.

Crilly said filming didn't have any negative effects on Wamego's day-to-day activities.

"Really, it all worked very well together. They didn't interfere with anything here," she said.

Balderson said he left film school before graduating because he was afraid if he stayed and just talked about making a movie, he might never actually do it.

"There are 8 million people in L.A. that try to convince you that they're making films. I don't need to sit there and tell them, 'I'm gonna make a film, and I'm gonna be a director.' I decided just to do it."

The movie will not be released nationally until at least this fall, if not later, even though filming was completed last fall.

The movie recently screened in Los Angeles, and it will screen at the Cannes International Film Festival in May. Balderson said the down side of filming in Kansas is people don't understand how much time and labor is involved in post-filming production.

"When people come up and ask those of us who have worked on the film, 'When can we see it on video?' or, 'When will it screen here again?' they just don't understand how it works," he said.

Balderson, who already has another movie in the works, said he finds it interesting that a person could be promoting one movie while working on another.

"It really freaks me out, the fact that I'm going to be shooting something else with the Jodie Fosters of the world and the rest of the world won't even have seen 'Pep Squad' yet," he said.

Balderson said that after he set the movie's budget, he and co-producer Eric Sherman came up with a business plan, which they presented to potential investors, including area business people, friends and relatives. He said it was important to meet his budget before filming began.

"We approached so many people, I don't remember how many," he said. "We started a limited partnership with them. We sold off shares, $50,000 units."

"I wanted to make sure we had all of the money up front, because I didn't want to get halfway through the film and then need more money. That happens to a lot of independent people. They'll start a film and then they'll just starve, and the movie will take like eight years to finish because they have no money," he said.

He has set the budget for his next film, "Firecracker," at $10 million. He said the movie, about murder in a small town, will be heavy and compared it to "In Cold Blood."

He has also written a book, "Issues," about the sociological issues portrayed in "Pep Squad" and issues he has with himself and with the world.

'Pep Squad' features local acting talent

AMY MILLER
Kansas State Collegian

Steve Balderson, writer and director of "Pep Squad," said finding talent for his movie wasn't difficult.

For one of the leads, he didn't have to look any farther than his sister, Brooke Balderson.

To fill smaller roles, Steve Balderson ran advertisements in local newspapers to draw local talent.

Richard McCauley, a student at Manhattan High School East Campus, answered one of the ads, auditioned for Balderson and landed the role of Tommy, a younger brother of one of the lead characters.

McCauley said Balderson gave him some direction for his part, but the other actors playing smaller characters helped him out, too. The actor portraying a school principal, who verbally puts Tommy down, practiced insulting him between takes.

"The supporting cast was really helpful," McCauley said.

Fliers announced that anyone who was interested in appearing as an extra in the movie should come to the filming.

Balderson said the extras had fun on the set. "There was one group of girls who showed up on the set every day. They were great. They had nicknames for us," he said.

Balderson said although he wrote one part for himself, he chose to direct the film rather than appear in it.

"I didn't want to be stupid enough to assume that I could do both," he said.

Satellite Soul entertains with pop Christian music

Satellite Soul
"Satellite Soul"

Organic

MARY RENEE SMITH
Kansas State Collegian

Not being a fan of contemporary Christian music, I didn't plan on becoming a big fan of Satellite Soul, which just goes to show that some of the best things in life aren't planned.

If you are expecting preachy hymns of salvation and temptation, you might want to look somewhere else.

These guys have a pop sound reminiscent of Blues Traveler and the Gin Blossoms rolled into one and combine that sound with lyrics that cross religious boundaries.

Satellite Soul's self-titled compact disc will have you dancing and singing along regardless of your religious beliefs.

The band's instrumental and vocal variety is impressive. Electric guitars, harmonicas, hammer dulcimer, flat iron mandolin and tight harmonies pour out with insightful lyrics about life, love and interstate travel.

"Either Way," the first track and the one the band members said is their favorite, is a perfect introduction to the band's sound.

The heavy-handed drum line combines with a strong chorus and clean guitar riffs to rival any band.

Although many of these songs are about an individual's personal relationship with Jesus Christ, they make fantastic love songs to describe any relationship. "Fool" is a perfect example of this kind of song. If I hadn't read the lyrics and seen the word "You" capitalized, I would never have known this was a Christian song.

"Interstate Travel" is the last track on the CD and has a flowing sound that reminds me of driving Kansas Highway 24 home. If you close your eyes you can hear the sound of your tires on the pavement and the sights of small towns.

Satellite Soul began in Manhattan and is now enjoying national success on the Christian Hit Radio chart. From the sound of this new release they are headed straight for the top. I foresee a mainstream pop crossover hit in the band's future.

The CD is also a multimedia extravaganza with biographies of each band member including juicy tidbits of favorite lines from a Monty Python movie. The CD-ROM also includes video of the band performing and talking about its newfound success.

The CD is available at Streetside Records and Hastings Book Music & Video.

The band will be appearing at 8 p.m. Friday in Union Station. Go. If these guys are half as good live as they are on the CD, it will be a fantastic show.

Satellite Soul has proved that music transcends all boundaries. Its ministry of music is powerful even to this non-Christian reviewer.

House expands death penalty law

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Avoiding what could have been a lengthy debate on capital punishment, the House gave tentative approval Tuesday to expanding the death penalty for the premeditated killing of any child under age 14.

Rep. Doug Mays said his bill would correct a glitch in the state law that makes such a killing a capital crime only when a child is murdered during a kidnapping or a kidnapping with intent to commit a sex crime.

"It makes me sad that we have to talk about people who would snuff out an innocent little life," Mays, R-Topeka, said. "We are talking about the murder of children."

The tentative approval came on a voice vote. A final vote of approval is needed to send the measure to the Senate.

Mays noted lawmakers hastily reinstated the death penalty in 1994, making it apply to seven specific types of capital murder, including killing a police officer or when more than one child is murdered at the same time.

"In our rush to pass a capital punishment bill, we didn't realize how flawed it was," Mays said.

The

avoided

whether

should have a

all, when

Rep. Richard

Alldritt decided against offering an amendment

capital punishment

— a debate the chamber had last year.

"It wasn't the right thing to do today,

I bowed to the will of the Democrats," said Alldritt, D-Harper. "When people in here were eight or 10 years, they made up their minds on this."

But Alldritt did raise the issue in his questioning of Mays.

"I don't understand why people vote

I BOWED TO THE WILL OF THE DEMOCRATS

RICHARD ALLDRITT
democrat representative for the death penalty, why they think it's a deterrent," Alldritt said. "Whatever law we pass, irrational people won't pay attention to it."

House Minority Leader Tom Sawyer, D-Wichita, said he asked Alldritt to shelve his amendment because, "It would have been a protracted debate and no minds would have been changed. The House hasn't changed since last year."

Earlier, Sawyer failed on a 41-77 vote to replace the death penalty for the premeditated killing of any child with a punishment of life imprisonment without parole, and requiring restitution to the victim's family.

"What is the mandatory restitution for the life of a child? You really can't put a value on a child's life," Mays said.

Sawyer said that under his proposal a child murderer "will die in prison, but God decides when they die, not the state."

He argued the death penalty isn't a deterrent and is applied arbitrarily. Sawyer also said since 1970 there have been 59 people released from death rows throughout the nation.

Rep. Michael Farmer, R-Wichita, added amendments allowing a judge or jury to decide whether a life sentence would sufficiently protect the public safety when a prosecutor seeks the death penalty.

Mays said Farmer's proposals would put into law what already is done by the courts and juries.

The bill also was amended by Rep. Joe Kejr, R-Brookville, to ensure the anonymity of the executioner and witnesses to executions.

The amendment also would have death warrants issued by the Kansas Supreme Court for a one-week period rather than for a specific day.

The death penalty law, passed in 1994, calls for execution by lethal injection at Lansing Correctional Facility — where the state's last executions were carried out in 1965 when five inmates were hanged.

Corrections officials estimate it will be at least five years before an execution is carried out in Kansas.

Iraq asks U.N. inspectors to ensure confidentiality

ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — Iraq asked Secretary-General Kofi Annan in a letter made public Tuesday to silence U.N. arms inspectors, punishing any who speak to journalists about the United Nations' search for banned weapons in Iraq.

Iraq's letter cited unspecified promises. Annan's spokesman, Fred Eckhard, told reporters Annan had made no such promises to the Iraqis during talks in Baghdad last month, which produced an agreement to open eight presidential palaces to U.N. inspectors.

Eckhard said there was a code of conduct that banned disclosure of confidential information uncovered by the inspectors. But he said he knew of no disciplinary moves contemplated against any inspectors.

In the strongly worded letter, Foreign Minister Mohammed Saeed Al-Sahhaf complained that members of the U.N. Special Commission on inspections have behaved "in a manner inconsistent with their official duties" by talking to reporters.

"Despite the promises that have been made to us, we have yet to see any disciplinary measures," he said.

Al-Sahhaf, who arrived in New York on Sunday for a week of talks with U.N. officials, did not say who made such promises, nor explain in detail what they entailed.

He specifically cited Cable News Network's "Impact" program, televised last week, in which several inspectors spoke of alleged Iraqi efforts to hide incriminating information and mislead the U.N. teams.

"The government of Iraq requests you to take a stand with regard to this matter," Al-Sahhaf said. "We further request you to take the appropriate measures with respect to the United Nations employees who participated in the programs."

The letter was dated Friday.

ATTENTION FRESHMEN AND TRANSFER STUDENTS!!

Did you achieve a 3.5 GPA last semester? If so, you are eligible to join

Phi Eta Sigma
National Honor Society

What is Phi Eta Sigma?

Phi Eta Sigma is a national honor society for college freshmen. Our goal is to encourage and reward academic excellence among first year students and to provide services to the community.

What do I have to do to join?

If you meet the membership requirements (>3.5 GPA last semester), you should have received a letter from us. If you have not received a letter, please contact us as soon as possible. There is a lifetime membership fee of $35. You and your parents will be invited to an induction banquet on Monday, April 20.

Once I join, what will I have to do?

Once you are a member, there are no additional requirements. Your level of participation is up to you. However, Phi Eta Sigma produces many opportunities to get involved, meet new people, and enhance your K-State experience!

For more information, contact:

Bart Peintner, Recruitment Chairman

bartp@ksu.edu, 539-2085 (please leave message)

APPLICATIONS MUST BE RECEIVED BY FRIDAY, MARCH 20th, SO PLEASE RESPOND AS SOON AS POSSIBLE!

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

CLASSIFIED AD WRITING TIPS

► List items or services first. Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for. Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations. Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

that could be done," she said.

According to the Riley County Police Department, fire units from four different agencies attempted to respond. Only the Westmoreland Fire Department was able to get through, but by then, little could be done.

Depew said she didn't know if the house could have been saved if the weather had been any different. Thankfully, she said, the fire wasn't at night, when her family slept.

Depew said her family has good fire insurance and plans to return to the Wamego area.

"We will go back out to the same place, and we will build again," Depew said.

Until the family rebuilds their home, the Simmer Motel in Wamego offered the use of its apartments.

The First National Bank in Wamego set up a fund for the Depew family. The Red Cross and the Depews' church, St. Luke's Lutheran in Wheaton, are also providing aid, Depew said.

"Things all start to fall in place again," she said.

Depew said she had a lot to be grateful for.

"There was a lot of luck there with us," she said.

Introductory biology course gets facelift

tions, probably more importantly asking students questions," Decker said.

Along with performing the usual biology laboratory exercises, students work on the computers to see simulations of concepts that do not have a hands-on lab, Decker said.

"That is one main advantage. We can create all kinds of simulations that we would otherwise just have to describe. A perfect example of that is evolutionary biology. We can't really do a lab with that, but we have a great simulation that explains it," he said.

Kathy Hill, junior in life sciences, is a lab practicum. She took Principles of Biology with the old system, and said the new program is a more efficient process.

"I think it's more efficient. There's more guidance for the students, but it sometimes depends on the topic you are studying," Hill said.

The success of the program is still being evaluated at two levels. Both students and teachers are being evaluated. A small group in the Division of Biology is studying the before-and-after effects of the new course.

"Any determination of success is subjective at this point, since we don't have those numbers available yet,"

Decker said.

Another technology program in the works is in the Department of English. After a trial run this summer, some of the 90 Expository Writing I classes taught each year will have a computer at each student's station.

"The classroom we are implementing on the second floor of Eisenhower Hall will have 24 machines and a teacher podium so that every single writing student will be sitting in front of his or her own computer for the class duration," said Larry Rodgers, associate professor and head of the English department.

Before deciding to change the entry-level course, Rodgers said a thorough review was done.

"I feel like our classes right now are running very well, so I had to find that it would actually enhance the writing students' learning," he said. "The English department is trying to teach students to think and write better so they can do it in the real world. That is what this program is based on, teaching them what they need to know."

Rodgers said another benefit of the new computer class is the exposure to technology.

"Since everyone goes through this class essentially, it gets students exposed to technology early in their career here at K-State," he said.

MANN, DAVIS READY FOR RUNOFF

MANN

► Mann/Macklin
Get 39.2 percent
of the vote.

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
Kansas State Collegian

K-State students will go to the polls again Wednesday to decide next year's student body president and vice president.

Tracey Mann, junior in political science and agricultural economics, and Andy Macklin, junior in mechanical engineering, earned 1,176 votes in this week's Student Governing Association elections, but did not earn the required 51 percent of the vote.

They will face Greg Davis, senior in marketing and management information systems, and Jim Boomer, senior in marketing information systems and accounting, in next week's runoff. Davis and Boomer received 909 votes.

Polling places and times have yet to be determined. Exactly 3,000 votes were cast in the presidential race, a 17-percent increase over last year's turnout.

Kathleen Copple, graduate assistant in the Office of Student Activities and Services who helped coordinate elections, said she was surprised by the turnout.

► Get the rest of the story.

"I have no idea why it was higher," she said. "We had no big issue this year really, and I am clueless as to why the turnout was so good."

Copple said campaigns between the Davis and Mann tickets will be intense during the next week as the two candidates face off for the campus' top office. The two candidates are allowed to spend another $180 more than their $815 spending limit during the runoff process.

Copple said the ballot-counting process went smoothly this year, which was another surprise. Most results were tabulated by 10:45 p.m.

"It went pretty smoothly this year, and it always surprises me when that part goes smooth," Copple said. "It's really labor-intensive, and I don't think people realize that."

Elections Committee members and candidates had worried earlier Wednesday, when they learned that the Computing and Network Services' ballot-counting machine had broken.

Copple said the CNS employee who counts the ballots was snowed in Monday and Tuesday and couldn't tabulate the first round of votes. Wednesday, when the machine malfunctioned, Copple said CNS used a machine at the KSU Foundation to count the votes.

"It probably pushed us back a little bit," Copple said of the scanning machine problem, "but it didn't hurt us as bad as it could have."

In some Student Senate and college council races, Copple said winners will still need to be contacted and verified. Nineteen Senate seats were elected by write-in votes, along with many seats on college councils.

If winners don't want to serve, people who receive the next-highest amounts of votes will be contacted for interest in the respective positions.

DAVIS

► Davis/Boomer
Get 30.3 percent
of the vote.

Mann, Macklin receive most votes in general election

ANGELA KISTNER
Kansas State Collegian

A hush came over the crowd at the Theta Xi house as someone yelled, "telephone" for Tracey Mann, but to the dismay of the guests, it was only a supporter wanting to know when the party was over.

When the real call came in, Tracey Mann calmly answered the phone and wrote down the results. There wasn't a hint on Mann's face as to the outcome.

He calmly walked into the main room where all the guests were, stood on a chair and said, "We just got the results in. As we expected, there is a runoff between Davis and Boomer and us."

After cheers from the crowd finally died down, Mann continued to address his supporters.

"For the record, we have 39 percent of the votes and they have 30 percent," he said.

Mann, junior in political science and agricultural economics, compared the election race to a race he remembered in high school. He said he remembered racing down the long stretch of a rectangular track.

"I was way ahead, but I didn't know the finish line was around the corner and stopped too soon," he said. "I'm not going to stop too soon this time. I'm going to keep going until we've reached the finish line and won."

Mann and Andy Macklin, Mann's running mate, said they were ready for a runoff and began to hand out a sheet with seven reminders for supporters to do.

They included voting with three friends next week, chalking sidewalks and hanging signs, reminding people you live with to vote, wearing Mann and Macklin shirts and going to the grand finale party next Wednesday.

"Since we were expecting a runoff, we came prepared," Mann said. "I wasn't a boy scout, but I know to be prepared."

Mann said he and Macklin, junior in mechanical engineering, have good issues. He said K-State definitely needs better advising, and a parking permit for the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex is in the interest of all the students.

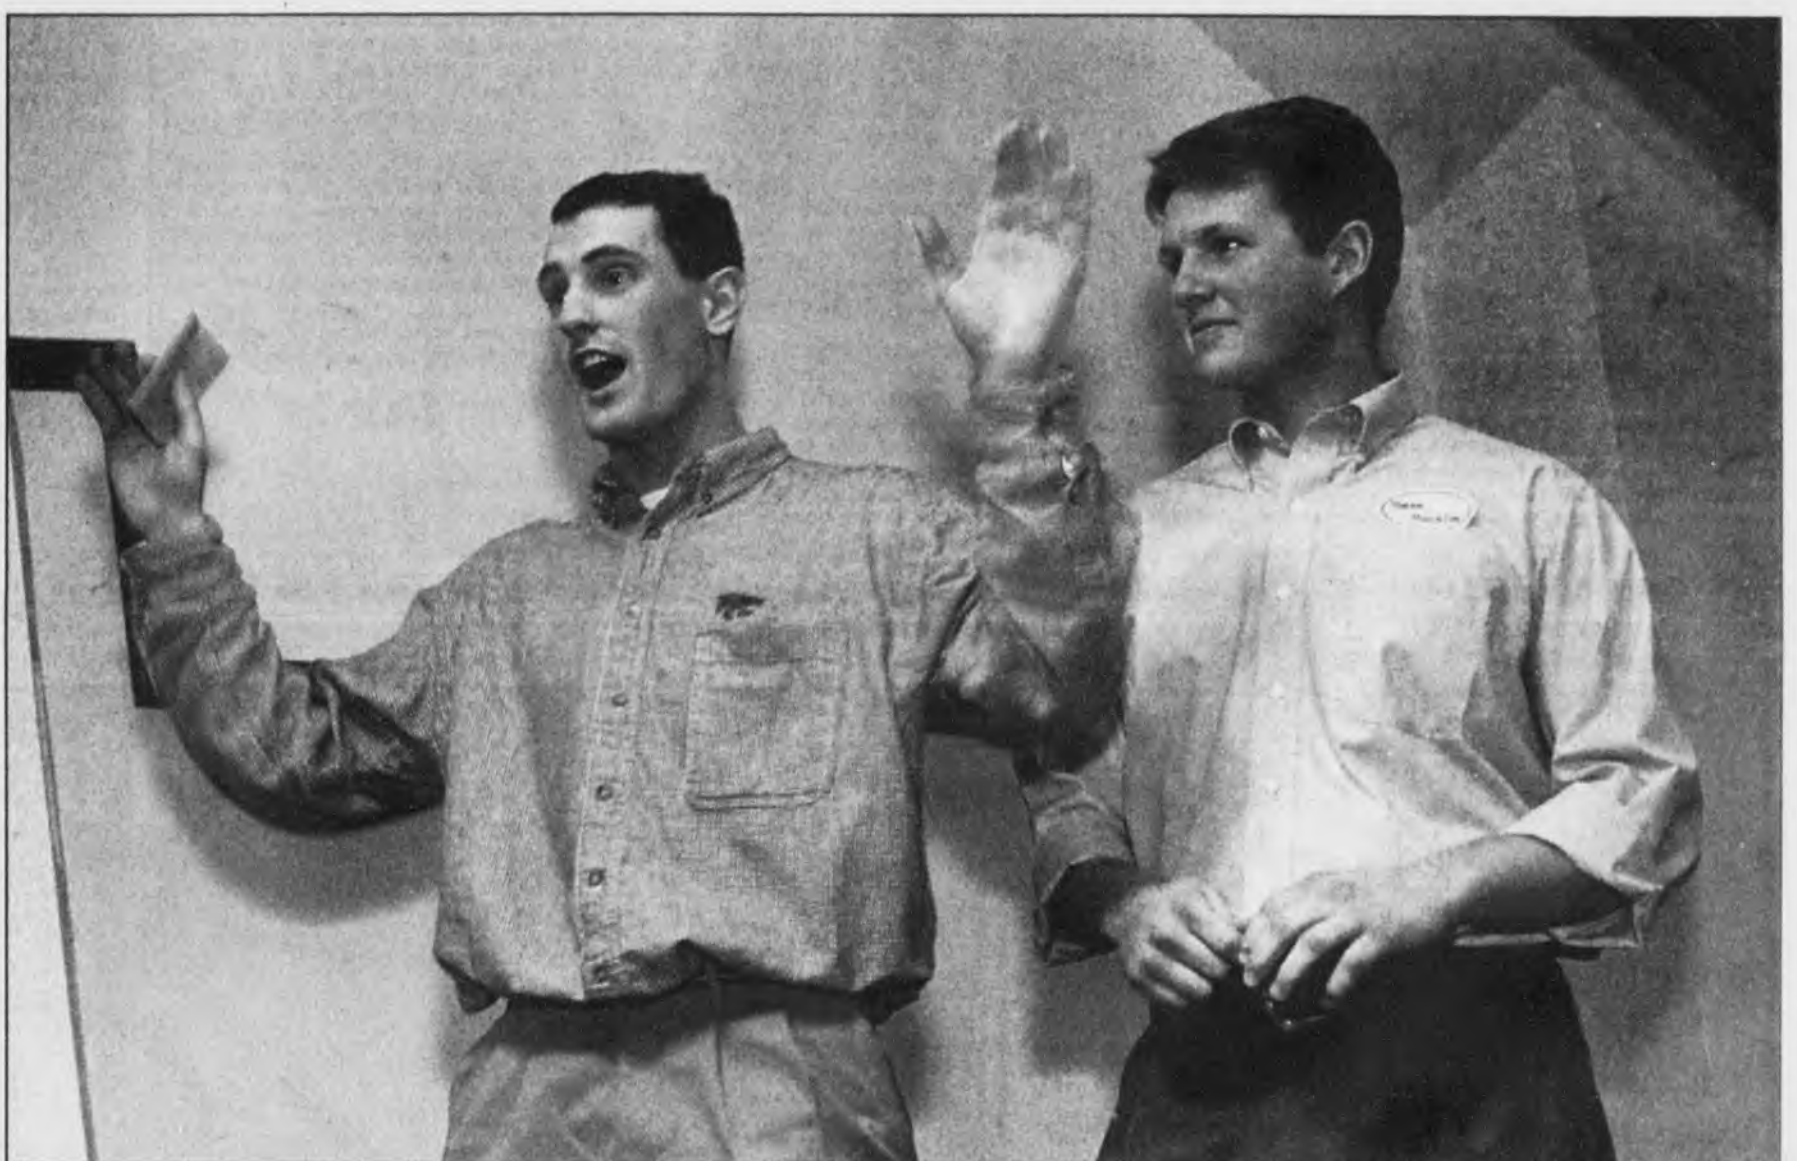

Mann also said the book swap would help save students a lot of money.

"I really feel if we get serious, we can win," he said.

After the cheers died down again, Macklin thanked all the people for attending.

"We just wanted to tell everyone thank you for coming."

Davis, Boomer to participate in runoff election

AMY BICKEL
Kansas State Collegian

Student body presidential candidate Greg Davis walked around nervously at his election party at 12th Street Pub last night as he waited for the election results to come in.

Now he and his supporters, who waited with him for the call to come in, will have to wait another week to find out if he is the next student body president.

Davis, senior in marketing and management information systems, and his running mate, Jim Boomer, senior in management information systems and accounting, are in a runoff for the office with Tracey Mann and Andy Macklin because there wasn't a candidate who got a majority of votes.

Davis and Boomer said they were both happy they were still in the race, but the news of the runoff didn't come as a shock to them.

"It was expected with five candidates running," Boomer said.

Davis said everyone ran a great campaign, and it was a tough election because everyone was qualified for the position.

He said the main problem for the candidates was the low voter turnout.

"We need to get the people that voted for other candidates to come back and vote for us," Davis said.

Davis and Boomer received 31 percent, while Mann and Macklin received 39 percent of the votes. Nine-hundred and nine students voted for his ticket.

He said his next goal was to reassemble the troops.

"The quantity of support we have here tonight is tremendous, and the quantity of support we have had throughout the campaign has been tremendous as well," Davis said. "We ran a damn good campaign. We didn't focus on anyone else's campaign but our own."

Their supporters said they weren't surprised by the election results.

Marc Whitmore, senior in civil engineering, said it was inevitable there was going to be a runoff with so many candidates. He said he was behind the Davis/Boomer ticket 100 percent.

"They're not eliminated yet. They still have a good chance to win," Whitmore said.

He also said he would be back next week to support Davis and Boomer in the runoff election. Alex Judd, senior in management, said the reason he voted for them was because of their platform.

"They addressed campus safety issues, which I think needs to be addressed, like the crosswalk where the girl got hit last week," Judd said. "They

Speaker says British, U.S. relationships benefit from close ties, extensive trade

A first secretary of the British Embassy in Washington, D.C., said there is a special relationship between the United States and Great Britain that helps create better ties between the countries.

Simon McDonald spoke to about 60 students on Tuesday afternoon about "Anglo-American Relations in the Blair Era."

McDonald was a speech writer for a British foreign secretary and has been a foreign service officer for the past 15 years.

"Simon has an intimate knowledge of British politics and foreign affairs," Jeff Pickering, assistant professor of political science.

The Blair era refers to Tony Blair, the new British Prime Minister. Many think the Blair era began in 1997 when he was elected.

"In my view of the young Blair era, it really didn't begin in 1997. It began in 1992. There was a feeling across much of Britain that it was time for a change. As we watched the election results on the TV that night, we were amazed that the Labor hadn't gotten it," McDonald said. "The Labor Party had failed again, and we had yet another conservative government for five years."

The last Tory government was in trouble from the day it started, because they didn't expect to win, he said. They were planning an opposition plan and ways to regroup. Suddenly, they were in power and had to come up with an agenda. By 1997, the Tories were ready to be overthrown, and the Labor had meticulously planned.

The last few months of the Tory government also was marred by scandals.

"The scandals make Lewinsky seem pretty tame,

McDonald said. "The idea of a man sleeping with a woman of legal age is small potatoes in British politics. It's underage boys and animals."

McDonald spoke of ways that British foreign relations with the United States are unique from relations with other countries since Blair was elected.

"Mr. Blair's personality is one of a friend. His personal conduct is important to how he conducts foreign policy. There is a wonderful and personal relationship between our two leaders," McDonald said.

The friendship between the two nations allows for large monetary investments in the other country.

The United States invests more in Great Britain than any other nation, and Britain is the biggest investor in the United States. No one notices because they do it by stealth, he said.

McDonald said the problem with Japanese companies is their names are Japanese, and Americans notice that difference. No one knows that Burger King and Dunkin' Donuts are companies from Great Britain.

The question-and-answer period addressed issues that Britain has with other countries.

"I thought it was pretty good, but it wasn't quite what I was expecting though. I thought it would focus a little more on America and Great Britain's views toward foreign policy. I didn't think he would talk as much about the Labor Party as he did," Brandon Konda, senior in history and political science, said. "But I also thought that the question-and-answer period was good because it gave some of his insight on different foreign activities."

K-State football fans can reserve seats for next season for total cost of $1,200

Football fans could have more leg room, arm rests and chairbacks to lounge against at football games, but the added comfort won't come cheap.

About 1,600 upper deck seats will be modified during next year's planned stadium expansion to have additional space and all the comforts of home, down to the cupholders.

The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics is offering fans the option to buy rights to the seats, but they must have a downpayment in by June. What they are buying is only the right to sit there, not the ticket itself.

The cost: $700 per year, ticket excluded, and those buying must make a five-year commitment through the 2003 season.

That's not the only qualifier. To reserve the special seats, ticket holders must be active members of the Ahearn Scholarship Fund. Anyone wanting one to four seats must make a minimum fund donation of $500; five to eight seats would require a minimum donation of $1,000. Those who donate the most and get their applications in earliest get the best seats.

Several people have already sent in their applications and deposits, athletic department ticket manager Carol Adolph said.

"We're getting calls every day now," Adolph said.

K-Stater selected to USA Today's top-60 students of the nation list

LINDSEY FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

Before she went to class on Feb. 13, Shanon Schoenthaler bought a copy of USA Today.

While flipping through the pages, Schoenthaler, senior in life science, said she noticed pictures of 20 college students who were chosen as USA Today's top college students in the nation. As she continued to flip through the pages, she noticed a list of 40 other top college students in the nation. One of those names was her own.

After almost a year of working on her honors thesis, Schoenthaler's work has paid off. It all began when she saw an advertisement in the Collegian asking for students to pick up applications for USA Today's contest for the top-60 college students in the nation.

"When I applied, I had to submit a special project or contribution," Schoenthaler said.

"Since I knew I was working on this project for my honors thesis anyway, I thought I could use it."

Schoenthaler filled out the application and wrote an essay explaining the details of her project. In a one-page summary, she wrote about how her project is beneficial to the community and society as a whole.

"I really didn't think I'd have a chance," she said. "I knew my research was good, but there are a lot of people in this country that are doing great things every day."

Schoenthaler didn't expect to win the award, but said she applied just to try.

"I just did it for the experience and on the off-chance that I would have a shot of getting on the list, just to kind of test myself, I guess," she said. "I didn't think I was a shoe-in."

Sanjay Kapil, assistant professor of diagnostic medicine and pathobiology and Schoenthaler's adviser for the project, wrote a smaller version of her summary and the importance of her project.

Schoenthaler worked in veterinary medicine previous to starting her thesis, and Kapil had expressed interest in becoming her adviser and helping her start the project.

Kapil suggested Schoenthaler work on Enzyme Link Immunosorbent Assay, a type of test specializing the detection of bovine cattle coronavirus. Schoenthaler started the project in January 1997.

"The testing is beneficial, mainly for economic reasons," she said. "When tests detect the virus, it will allow farmers and ranchers to take action for animals that they know have it. Otherwise, they don't know."

Professors of veterinary medicine use the testing to diagnose cows that have or show signs of having the clinical virus, Schoenthaler said. The widespread virus has been known to affect billions of cattle.

"Farmers and ranchers will lose cattle when they have this, because calves will dehydrate and die," she said. "If they know the certain animal has this, they can remove it from a herd, and it won't spread as quickly. Then they won't lose as many cattle."

She said work on the project was time consuming. She worked seven to eight hours a day, three days a week. It took that long to run a test. She said she usually worked Friday, Saturday and Sunday, because she couldn't get tests done in the middle of the week.

Schoenthaler tested antibodies for the virus on a plastic microtiter plate.

"When I run tests, I have to prepare the plate that the test is run on," she said. "The rest of the time is spent putting different additions on to the plate and washing the plate."

SHANON SCHOENTHALER, SENIOR IN LIFE SCIENCE, WAS NAMED ONE OF THE TOP-60 SCHOLARS IN THE NATION BY USA TODAY. SCHOENTHALER APPLIED FOR THE AWARD AFTER SEEING AN ADVERTISEMENT IN THE COLLEGIAN.

JILL JARSULIC/Collegian

After perfecting the tests, she had the results and time to start her thesis.

Last October, Schoenthaler went to Louisville, Ky., to present her project at a conference for the American Association of Veterinary Laboratory Diagnosticians. She was the only undergraduate to present research at the conference.

"This project has brought me a lot of good things that I never could have had if I wouldn't have started working at Vet Med," Schoenthaler said.

She has almost completed her thesis, and said she hopes to have her results published in the Journal of Clinical Microbiology, a national science journal that publishes research from scientists across the nation.

"Since this is such a nationwide thing, I think it will be kind of impressive to people who are looking at me for whatever reason," she said.

Kapil said he was impressed with her high recommendation for the project, but he said the award as one of USA Today's top-60 college students was not initially part of his plan.

"The main thing was to find a good student who could work on a project," Kapil said.

"While she was working, we decided that she could go and apply for an award. There's no harm in applying."

Kapil said he gave Schoenthaler the idea and design for her project. She took over the whole process and worked for about eight months, without becoming discouraged.

"Somebody had to take the time, initiative, and will to work on it, and Shanon made it work. That's where the real credit goes," Kapil said.

Kapil said Schoenthaler's work is important to more than just K-State.

"Another reason we should appreciate her efforts is that she is now helping the diagnostic lab, the Kansas farmers and the cattle industry of the U.S.," Kapil said.

"This has become a test of extreme national interest."

Kapil said Schoenthaler tested more than 2,000 samples of her project and now has been working on it for more than a year.

He said a 1988 study shows a $250,000 loss that the U.S. cattle industry continues to battle, but with projects like Schoenthaler's the problem can be solved.

"I'm very proud of her award, but her project will bring her a lot of permanent recognition," Kapil said.

After Schoenthaler graduates in May, she plans to attend University of Kansas School of Medicine in Kansas City, Mo. She plans to work in primary care, with a specialty in internal medicine.

"I think it's important to let people know that if you don't try something, you're never going to gain any benefits," Schoenthaler said. "But if you try, then you never know what's going to happen. Like in my case, I never expected to win, but I did."

Future of SGA success depends on teamwork

The students voted and elected the 1998-99 members of the Student Governing Association. Congratulations to the winners.

This election means the introduction of new faces and the return of leadership. Hopefully, it won't mean more of the status quo.

Now is the time for change and for students in all colleges to step forward and demonstrate leadership. Now is the time to make a difference.

As a collective body, SGA has the opportunity to do great things and bring about positive changes for the campus.

To do this, members must set aside affiliations and differences to work together. Some good ideas emerged in the campaigns of students who were not elected.

However, those ideas can still be implemented for the improvement of the campus.

Whether you were elected by one vote or a landslide, you now represent all the students in your college or governing body. Your job is to act on the concerns of those students and be their representative voice in the legislative body. Listen to your constituents and continue a campaign to gather information throughout the year.

Follow through on campaign promises and remember to listen to the students you represent. Look for ways to cut out red tape and improve life at K-State for all students.

K-State's SGA has been voted one of the best in the nation in the past. Part of this success can be attributed to President Jon Wefald's decision to give Student Senate the power to review and set all campus privilege fees. In 11 years, he has never vetoed one of their decisions.

SGA should be an inclusive forum for the ideas and concerns of all students. This body provides an important function on this campus. In addition to allocating more than $8.3 million in student-generated fees, this body also ensures the survival of our student rights.

SGA REFORM HANDBOOK

Time consuming system shouldn't dominate students' lives

Unfortunately the vagaries of the real world require that this installment of my weekly column be prepared before any of the results for this year's Student Governing Association elections are finalized.

Were I privy to such knowledge already, I would focus the following paragraphs more squarely toward the shoulders of those who will be most able to bear the burden in the next year. Because that is not possible, I feel it is beneficial to offer such suggestions in the public arena in the hopes that students next year, who will not have forgotten these suggestions and feel like they have some initiative to spare, might be able to see them through to reality.

I propose the following reforms to the K-State SGA:

- 1) Any student may only hold one SGA position at a time.
- 2) The number of academic years a student may hold each position is limited to one.
- 3) No student (except the student body president, vice president, cabinet members and a few others) is allowed to spend more than 10 hours in the Office of Student Activities and Services in any given seven-day period. Those excepted by this regulation might be allowed approximately 20 hours.
- 4) A centralized SGA information service will be established, which will function much like the information services of other legislative bodies. It will provide members with information needed to make proper decisions and publicize proceedings and actions taken by the various bodies in a timely and efficient manner.

The first two proposals would require and allow more students to become involved. Limiting the number of SGA hats student may wear at a time is smart in a university atmosphere. It is difficult to believe that there is any substantial benefit garnered by the student body when one student is elected to fill more than one SGA position.

It runs contrary to the principle of fair and equal representation that one student is allowed to have a hand in several different parts of the process, defeating the pseudo-federalistic system of separate College Councils and a centralized Student Senate. It also concentrates the actual voice of the student body beyond the point of reason. In a platonic exercise, envision an SGA composed of only one student who filled all the separate positions. Would anyone feel that was fair representation?

Moreover, the first two reforms would help students prioritize. Students would not be prevented from serving their fellow students by the reforms, but the knowledge that they will only be able to fill a position for one year should induce those interested in serving to seek election for an academic year when they can truly commit themselves to it, which benefits the student body.

Along those lines, these proposals would also have the beneficial effect of reducing SGA involvement to what it's intended to be — a chance to serve fellow students by representing their concerns and attitudes. Recall that SGA involvement is supposed to be an extracurricular activity. That designation indicates quite distinctly that SGA involvement, while a learning activity, should not, for any participants, interfere with the ability of participants to continue with their normal curricular activities (i.e., earn a degree).

When the system has become so time-consuming that it limits students from becoming involved because they fear that truly living up to the responsibilities of an elected position and maintaining a strong academic standing are mutually exclusive concepts, then the system is corrupt and no longer benefits those it's intended to serve.

Furthermore, SGA involvement was never intended to become the central extracurricular activity of any student's time at K-State. When this happens, and student representatives are spending too many hours in meeting rooms many students never even know exist, the system loses its transparency, because students are representing students they rarely come in contact with. (This is why apportioning SGA positions along living arrangements also makes sense.)

If SGA involvement was intended to be an all-encompassing activity, it would be under the jurisdiction of the NCAA, and schools could recruit students on the basis of their knowledge of proper parliamentary procedure. Ranking services would help Pat Bosco, dean of student life, decide which blue-chip orators to go after during the early signing period, and alumni would return each Thursday night, bedecked in purple, hoping to glimpse Senate in action.

The final proposal would help limit the time commitment necessary for students wishing to participate, make the system more transparent and bolster one of the main weaknesses of the SGA system. Currently, concerned students wishing to express an opinion to an SGA body often stop themselves, afraid that they'll appear before a committee two nights after the committee has already taken action, or fearful that they don't know the full story because they weren't present at previous meetings.

Establishing a framework through which information may be disseminated quickly and efficiently is the only way to repair this situation. Most importantly, providing a means by which students who are representing us, as well as other concerned students, may obtain up-to-date information concerning the issues being decided is obviously critical. Many times, acquiring the data one might need requires a lot of legwork, or a lot of influence on campus.

Eliminating this deficiency provides better informed representatives, while allowing concerned students to provide input from the vantage point of equal knowledge.

The previous suggestions are admittedly a framework and therefore open to constructive criticism. Were I to claim perfect knowledge, I would be copying the characteristics that these reforms are designed to remove. However, I stand behind the central thrust of my proposals and hope that others understand the chance they would offer SGA to tremendously strengthen itself by striking at the heart of the problems SGA faces. Worrying about the steps that would need to be taken in order for the proposals to be enacted is neither material nor worthy criticism at this juncture, in light of the current (apathetic) state of affairs.

People should not ask for opinions unless they can handle harsh truth

"If you can't say something nice, don't say anything at all." We've all heard this advice before. More than likely, the first time you heard it, you were a young child and had just said something rude but completely true to someone. And parents wonder where their children learn to lie?

We learned from this ancient advice that there are times when you shouldn't say what you're thinking. But people like to talk. We want to say something, so we try to find something nice to say. By definition, this causes us to lie, to say something that is other than what we know to be true.

I know some people are thinking of examples of when you can find something nice to say without lying, but in doing so, you are avoiding the truth.

Not to be sexist, but I have noticed women are particularly bad about this when asked by another woman for an opinion.

A woman could walk into a room looking much like an orangutan had been nesting in her hair the night before and ask, "Do you like my new haircut?" The roomful of women would come back with, "It looks so cute." "Oh, I like it, where did you have it done?" But as soon as the insult to the eye leaves the room, they say, "My God! Did you see her hair? It was horrible! I think something's been nesting in it!"

Why can't people be honest about this stuff? Really, if I ask for someone's opinion, that is what I want. The cold hard truth. If you tell me anything but the truth, I won't know it, because I would assume if anyone can be honest with each other, friends can.

If you're on the way out the door for a hot date and you ask, "How do I look?" You will always be told, "You look good, (cute, fine or any other synonym for good). What you won't hear is the truth. Your fly is open. You have something (possibly still living) in your teeth. You have a zit that rivals Mount Saint Helens, and if you leave the house in those pants, by state law you're going to have to wear a back-up beeper and put a flashing yellow light on your butt.

People lie like this their whole lives, and society welcomes it.

People like me are often considered rude for telling the truth when it's not pleasant. I'm not suggesting anyone go out of their way to be nasty to anyone else, but don't go out of your way to find something totally positive to say if that's not what you think. No one should ask for an opinion unless they want one. If you want reassurance, don't ask for an opinion, ask for encouraging remarks, or be prepared to handle the truth.

After learning to tell lies considered to be socially acceptable, as in the previous examples, it's only a few short steps to feeling comfortable telling big lies. Lies that can have serious effects on someone's life. The hot lies right now are going on in the big White House sex scandal. One side says something happened, the other side says nothing happened, and thus we all know someone is lying.

The amusing thing to me is that who you believe is 100-percent based on who you like in a situation of big lies. In this case, if you're a conservative, you have no doubt that President Clinton bumped uglies with the intern, and if you're liberal, you're sure they didn't.

The funniest thing is how sure of themselves people are on both sides of an issue like this are. In a case involving big lies, you can't take sides, because you have no way of knowing who is lying. Big lies are made with personal interest in mind, and in any issue like the scandal, you have to consider what each side has to gain from lying.

The worst thing about situations where both sides benefit from lying is that there is no way to ever really know the truth unless you are one of the accused. No matter what anyone says on either side, they could be lying.

It seems as though this cycle of lies is bound to roll on eternally. As long as someone can benefit from telling a lie, there will be lies told.

However, we may be able to at least make lying a shameful thing, instead of an everyday occurrence. In addition to teaching our children to be polite, perhaps we should also teach them, "If you can't say something honest, don't say anything at all."

Tuition dollars should benefit Hale Library

Editor,

After reading the column submitted by Susan K. Peterson, the assistant to the president for governmental relations, I felt it was necessary to offer a response. While I respect Peterson's opinion, and I certainly agree that the administration has made strides to better fund the library, I also believe that Tuesday's column makes one specific assertion that is incorrect.

The incorrect assertion is that the decision made by Student Senate was based entirely on a perceived "lack of central administration and library administration support for Hale Library."

The facts presented by Peterson would certainly encourage anyone to rethink such a position.

Unfortunately, making the statement that this was the sole argument provided would be misleading, and it would ignore the several other arguments provided during the long debate that ensued within Senate in March 5's Senate meeting.

While the role of the administration was called into question, I believe at least two other more credible arguments were offered by those in opposition to the creation of a privilege fee for Hale Library. First, there are many within Senate who believe students should not be required to purchase journals, periodicals or any other materials through the use of privilege fees, since each and every student is required to pay tuition.

I personally find this argument the most compelling. I see the library as a cornerstone of our education, equivalent to sitting in a classroom, listening to a lecture, taking notes, taking exams and even writing papers.

I then ask the question, how can I write a paper if I have no books from which to base my conclusions?

I believe the tuition dollars I pay to K-

State and the state of Kansas should be better used to address the resource concerns of the library.

Considering the argument presented in Senate on March 5, I then approach the role of the Legislature and our administration in providing valuable resources so we can increase the quality of our library.

While I and every other student on this campus pays tuition, I cannot help but ask the question, "Where are my tuition dollars going?"

If we as a university cannot formulate a reasonable argument before the Legislature that accurately demonstrates the dire straits our university library finds itself, then maybe we can better dedicate ourselves to the goal of convincing the state to provide more resources through the tuition dollars each student currently pays.

Furthermore, the Legislature, especially in a year that it is $400 million flush in state reserves, should be more than able to provide the funding for our library. Then I need to ask myself the question again, "Why have they not done so?"

The final argument presented during the Senate meeting was one also addressed by the Senate Ad-Hoc Committee on the Library Fee and individual members of the Library Task Force. The argument presented before Senate was the purpose of privilege fees on the K-State campus. As has been reinforced all year, privilege fees provide services on this campus and are not required to obtain academic degrees, as is the case with the library subscriptions.

While Senate does agree that Hale Library does need more funding, the appropriate funding source is not privilege fees but tuition.

Thus, we should focus on obtaining a larger percentage of tuition dollars from the state to further enhance our education, because we are the ones paying for our education.

I believe that Senate sent a very clear message on March 5, and that is the students will have given $5.5 million in privilege fee dollars to Hale Library by the time we are done paying off the bonds. All year, Senate has sent a very responsible message to everyone on the K-State campus that all existing and new fees would be scrutinized thoroughly.

The Hale Library privilege fee was no different.

I would hope that everyone on the K-State campus would understand that both the Privilege Fee Committee and Senate considered a mountain of evidence and many different arguments before rendering a final vote on this issue, and no one point made the essential difference.

As a member of Senate, I was totally satisfied with the process and would hope everyone would understand the complexities of that process and its inherent wisdom, regardless of whether the outcome was to their liking.

Picture discrepancy causes reader concern

Editor,

I have a question. On March 3, the women's basketball team won its first game of the Big 12 Tournament and subsequently lost to the University of Kansas in Game 2. On March 5, the men's basketball team won its first game of the Big 12 Tournament and subsequently lost to KU in Game 2.

The women's success was reported in a rather large spread on page 6 of the Collegian the next day. The men's success was also reported in a rather large spread on page 6 of the Collegian the next day — but the men also rated a half-page picture under a banner headline on the front page. Why the discrepancy?

Norwegian house architect displays art at Chang Gallery

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

At a recent lecture to the Flint Hills chapter of the American Institute of Architects, Torgeir Norheim revealed a somewhat personal side of his career.

The facades of his former home in Stavanger, Norway, which he designed in 1985, are portraits of his family. Abstract, of course, but nonetheless a kind of homage to those closest to him.

The west elevation, of his youngest son, puts on a big smile, because Norheim said his son always gets into and out of trouble by smiling through it.

Norheim, assistant professor of architecture, is exhibiting designs from one of his Stavanger houses until Friday in the Chang Gallery in Seaton Hall. The documents, ranging from schematic design to design development to construction drawings, illustrate Norheim's approach to the design process.

Context is of obvious importance to Norheim, because his Stavanger family home takes cues from the local Viking legacy and is sufficiently colorful to fight the darkness that pervades Norway during most of the year.

Another Norwegian house, designed much later, takes almost literal cues from Viking ships with an almost pop-art approach to architecture. Another design, called the fish warehouse, speaks for itself.

Norheim calls his approach to design "meta-operative architecture."

"You are operating between the various layers of knowledge, and you tie that to architecture," Norheim said, referring to the variety of source material used in meta-operative architecture. Not surprisingly, Norheim paints abstractly as a point of departure for his architecture.

His family home, which has been a point of departure for all of Norheim's work since, is a jungle of colorful structural and ornamental elements, while at the same time it's open between floors.

"At the time, we were both working and the kids were in kindergarten. I never saw the kids, so when I was home I could always hear the kids somewhere in the house," Norheim said. "I could always have contact with them. This was the favorite playground of all the kids in the neighborhood."

The home was so personal for the Norheim family, the architect even said the house had its own personality and would talk to them. Norheim said the new owner has begun collecting art since moving in.

"His notion is that the house actually told him to do this," Norheim said.

The house's exterior is mainly structural concrete, given a warmer tone with colorful window treatments and a profusion of glass. The use of color throughout the house traces to Norheim's early studies in psychology and the effects of blue, green, yellow and red on the human condition.

"One thread that goes through my architecture is answering the question 'How can architecture make people more creative?'" Norheim said.

Of his new Manhattan house, built in 1954, Norheim is working on making a few changes and creating connections within the house, such as between the first floor and the basement.

"It's a bastard of a house, but that's what I liked about it," Norheim said.

Norheim was born in the San Francisco bay area, but grew up in Norway where he lived during most of the 1980s. He then practiced architecture in California until coming to K-State five years ago. He still practices architecture in Norway.

"When you come into a new environment it's like starting all over again," Norheim said. "Not that I would mind doing carports, garages and additions, it's just easier to continue my connections in Norway."

However, Norheim said one of his greatest goals is to design a house for the prairie.

"The potential is great for architecture in the Midwestern prairie — the horizontality, the big sky, the horizon," Norheim said.

Of American architecture, Norheim said the tendency now toward romanticism is even happening in Norway.

"The past is all we know, and the past is safe," he said. "To me, it's this notion of Disneyland in architecture. This is my biggest struggle in Norway, to get people to acknowledge the present and set their sights on the future."

Norheim suggests fantasy is a good thing in architecture, and specified Las Vegas as a model as the only city in the world that has "embraced fantasy."

"The notion that fantasy and imagination will have greater value and higher rank in the value system in the future will produce a totally different setting than the romanticism we have at the present," Norheim said. "Obviously, the romantic period we are in will change to a more contemporary setting and that will change the architecture."

"I acknowledge that Victorian and Tudor architecture had quite a lot of qualities when it was conceived, but it is hopeless to celebrate those same ideas in this day and age. We are building falsehood."

Vet-Med professor died Wednesday at his home

JOHN STOUS
Kansas State Collegian

Dr. S. Kaleem Quadri, professor of anatomy and physiology with the College of Veterinary Medicine, died Wednesday morning in his home.

Quadri, 58, died of a heart attack at 9:15 a.m., said Dr. John Bambara, coroner at Peterson Clinical Laboratory.

Quadri came to K-State as an associate professor in 1977 in the Department of Anatomy and Physiology. He was promoted to professor in 1988.

Some of Quadri's published research work discussed brain endocrine relationships, endocrine influence on tumors and hormonal influences in reproduction.

Shawn Taylor, Quadri's lab technician for the past five years, said Quadri really enjoyed teaching.

"Dr. Quadri put his students first, he got along with everybody, and was a terrific boss," he said. "He had good research and just really enjoyed teaching."

Quadri just had completed his part of the Physiology II course for first-year students. Many first-year students said Quadri was one of their favorite teachers.

"This is only my second semester in vet school, but he was by far one of the best teachers I have ever had, and that includes undergraduate school," Greg Meyers, first-year student, said. "One of his biggest sayings was 'You've got to think,' and we do. He made difficult subjects fun to learn. I haven't talked to another student in our class or those above us that ever said negative words about him."

Nels Lindberg, first-year student, also said everybody liked Quadri.

"He was awesome. I think that he is known as one of the top researchers in endocrinology, and it will be very tough to replace him," he said.

Brad Fenwick, professor of pathobiology, said Quadri was one of the most advanced researchers in his field, and that even with Quadri's success as a researcher, his highest priority was his students.

"He valued his research, but when it came time to teach, Dr. Quadri focused on the students," he said.

Funeral arrangements are being made through Edwards-Yorgensen-Meloan Funeral Home at 1616 Poyntz Ave.

The phone number at the funeral home is 539-7481.

Councils win many awards at national greek conference

LINDSEY FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

Greek officers on K-State's Panhellenic and Interfraternity councils flew to Chicago to the Mid American Greek Council Association, an annual greek conference, and returned with a streak of awards.

This year's greek officers returned to school in early January to submit documentation of their yearly affairs to MGCA. The officers sent award packages into the MGCA consisting of eight categories of greek activity and leadership.

Last year, Panhellenic Council won seven of the eight awards at the conference, and the Interfraternity Council won all eight of the awards.

"We did really well last year, and we keep getting better," said Jennifer Gorman, president of Panhellenic Council and senior in life science. "We were really hoping to win."

Greek councils from all across the Midwest met at the conference and conversed in small groups led by greek advisers. Councils traveled from 16 states ranging from North Dakota to Texas, Colorado and Ohio.

Barb Robel, adviser for Greek Affairs, said the councils tried a new program this year and submitted the new criteria to the conference judges.

"They were hoping to do well," Robel said.

"They ended up winning more awards than any other school. They never know how they are going to stack up against everyone else."

The Panhellenic Council won the eight awards possible and were presented with the Sutherland, an award to the council with over all excellence.

"Compared to the other greek systems from the Midwest, it was evident with the amount of work that we won," Gorman said. "We are one of the best."

The Interfraternity Council won six of the eight awards possible, two more than any other council at the conference.

"We didn't win a couple that we wanted to," said Greg Davis, Interfraternity Council president and senior in management information systems and marketing. "We expected to do better, but we are in the largest scale for fraternities. We do surprisingly well."

After the councils returned from Chicago, they brought the new information learned at the conference to the greek system.

"What's unique about our greek system is that our Panhellenic and Interfraternity councils work collaboratively," Davis said. "This year is one of our most strong councils because we've implemented more new programs for our councils than in the past five years. We're the most innovative council we've had for a long time."

SPORTS ROUNDUP

Sports Roundup is a daily dose of the latest scores, stats and news from the world of sports outside of K-State. Compiled from Associated Press reports.

NIT ROUNDUP

Dayton 95, Long Island 92

DAYTON, Ohio — Dayton withstood a 45-point night by Long Island's Charles Jones for a 95-92 win on Wednesday in the first round of the NIT.

Long Island trailed by 17 points at half-time, but Jones scored 19 points in the first 11 minutes of the second half to move the Blackbirds within 69-66 with 9:15 left.

Vanderbilt 73, St. Bonaventure 61

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Dan Langhi scored 16 points off the bench for Vanderbilt, which nearly blew a 13-point lead before downing St. Bonaventure 73-61 Wednesday night in the opening round of the NIT.

The Commodores (19-12) will play the winner of Thursday night's Wake Forest-North Carolina-Wilmington game in the second round.

Marquette 80, Creighton 68

MILWAUKEE — Aaron Hutchins had 19 points and seven assists to lead Marquette past Creighton 80-68 in the first round of the NIT Wednesday night.

Rodney Buford of Creighton led all scorers with 24 points, but the Blue Jays (18-10) failed to hit a field goal in the last 8:28 of the game. Creighton ended its season with four straight losses.

Georgetown 71, Florida 69

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Shernard Long hit a layup as time expired Wednesday night, giving Georgetown a 71-69 victory over Florida in the first round of the NIT.

The Gators (14-15), who went on a 12-3 run to tie the game, had a chance to win with eight seconds left. But Georgetown's press caused senior Dan Williams to turn the ball over, leading to Long's uncontested layup.

Long finished with 28 points to lead the Hoyas (16-14), who will play Georgia Tech in the second round. Florida ended its season with a losing record for the third-straight year.

Minnesota 77, Colorado State 65

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. — Sam Jacobson scored 20 points Wednesday night as Minnesota ran away from Colorado State in the second half and advanced to the second round of the NIT with a 77-65 victory.

The Gophers (16-15) had a 9-0 run to open the second half and another 9-0 run a few minutes later to build a 68-48 lead with 8:25 remaining.

Alabama-Birmingham 93, Missouri 86

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Fred Williams scored a career-high 23 points as Alabama-Birmingham beat Missouri 93-86 Wednesday night in the opening round of the NIT.

Missouri (17-15) lost for just the second time on its home court despite a career-high 29 points from John Woods, who hit eight three-point field goals. Albert White, who scored just four points in the first half, finished the game with 22 points.

Auburn 77, Southern Mississippi 62

AUBURN, Ala. — Sophomore Mamadou N'diaye scored a career-high 19 points Wednesday to lead Auburn to its first postseason win in 10 years, a 77-62 victory over Southern Mississippi in the first round of the NIT.

It snapped a five-game losing streak for the Tigers (16-13) and marked their first NIT win in four appearances. It was the first postseason win of any sort for Auburn since the first round of the 1988 NCAA Tournament.

Memphis 90, Ball State 67

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Keldrick Bradford scored a career-high 27 points and Omar Sneed added 25 points and 17 rebounds Wednesday night as Memphis topped Ball State 90-67 in the opening round of the NIT.

Bradford's points came on 10-of-17 shooting from the field and seven-of-eight from the line. But his biggest contribution could have been his defense against the Cardinals' leading scorer Bonzi Wells.

Wells managed only nine points, well under the senior's 23.3-point average. The total was a season low for the Mid-American Conference's all-time leading scorer.

Georgia Tech 88, Seton Hall 78

ATLANTA — Freshman Dion Glover scored a season-high 33 points and Georgia Tech started the second half with a 20-5 run en route to an 88-78 victory over Seton Hall in the first round of the NIT on Wednesday night.

The Yellow Jackets (18-13), who dropped the final three games of the regular season and their opener in the ACC tournament, had a season-best 15 three-pointers, one short of the school record.

Penn State 82, Rider 68

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — Pete Lisicky scored 20 points and Calvin Booth blocked five shots as Penn State defeated Rider 82-68 Wednesday night in the first round of the NIT.

The Broncos used a stingy defense to confuse the Lions in building a 28-18 lead, but Penn State took control with five minutes left in the first half, outscoring Rider 27-8 in the next 7:46.

Gonzaga 69, Wyoming 55

LARAMIE, Wyo. — Quentin Hall hit four consecutive three-pointers in a 16-0 run that sparked Gonzaga to a 69-55 win over Wyoming on Wednesday night in the first round of the National Invitation Tournament.

Gonzaga (24-9) struggled to break away from the Cowboys (19-9) through much of the second half after holding a 32-31 lead at halftime.

WILDCATS FALL FROM NIT

ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH, N.C. — There was a reintroduction in the North Carolina State locker room at halftime Wednesday night — team, meet your leading scorer.

"We reminded our team that C.C. (Harrison) is on our side and we made it a point of emphasis to work harder to get him freed and try to get him more involved," Wolfpack coach Herb Sendek said following his team's 59-39 victory over K-State in the first round of the National Invitational Tournament.

The Wolfpack found its leader more in the final 20 minutes as Harrison sparked a sluggish offense with four second-half three-pointers, and Kenny Inge continued his late-season surge with 13 points and 11 rebounds.

"He kind of put the team on his shoulders," Sendek said of Harrison, who scored 16 of his 20 points in the final 16:40. "Our team did a better job, but he also took some of that upon himself and said, 'Hey, I'm doing it.'"

N.C. State (17-14) advanced to the second round of the 32-team tournament for the second straight season with a game-closing 22-6 run in the final 10:11.

K-State ended its season at 17-12 with a season-low point total as the Wildcats shot 22.2 percent in the second half. It was the lowest total points for a K-State team since Jan. 6, 1992, when they were kept to 34 points at Oklahoma State.

K-State's previous low this season was 58 points against No. 2 Kansas on Feb. 14. The Cats had averaged 75.9 points a game to finish in the upper half of the Big 12 in scoring.

"We need to take this into next year as a valuable lesson," K-State coach Tom Asbury said.

The Cats, led by 11 points from Ty Sims, went the final 7:18 without a basket. Leading scorer Manny Dies was kept to a season-low six points in 28 minutes.

"They did a pretty good job on him and they focused on him," Asbury said of Dies. "We tried some tough passes to him, and he passed up some shots he shouldn't have. But believe me he wasn't the Lone Ranger, by any means. He was not alone out there in his ineffectiveness."

Harrison, a second-team all-Atlantic Coast Conference member and the ACC's leading three-point shooter, was kept to four points on just five shots in the opening period before catching fire from beyond the arc.

"He can make some shots on you," Asbury said. "It would be very unusual if he didn't, but we've got to come down and answer, we've got to score. Thirty-nine points — who are we kidding? That's a joke. Their defense is not that good."

Harrison sank three three-pointers in a three-minute span as the game remained close at 37-33, then closed a 9-0 Wolfpack run with another long-range shot to put N.C. State ahead 46-33 with 7:53 left.

Inge, a freshman, recorded his seventh double-double in the past nine games.

"If you allow your mind to have a Kodak moment and go back and kind of see where we've been at different points at the season, those guys have come a long way," Sendek said of Inge and fellow frontcourt player Ron Kelley.

The Wolfpack, coming off a season-low 28.3-percent shooting effort in a 73-46 loss to No. 1 North Carolina in the ACC tournament, started five-for-20 against the Cats.

Baseball team ready to play unscheduled game against Shockers

JEREMY KELLEY

Kansas State Collegian

The inclement weather is wreaking havoc on the K-State baseball team.

Three of the Cats' past four games have been canceled because of the extreme conditions, and it's taking its toll on the team.

"It's frustrating," pitcher Casey Cook said. "We get outside, and then we go back, and I think we're really tired of it right now. We just want to get some games in."

Cook said it was more mentally tiring due to the preparations for a regular game day.

"We finally get outside and get used to that for a while, but then we have to come back in," he said. "Mentally it's just exhausting."

The coaching staff said they feel the same way, too.

"It takes a toll on everyone," Mike Hensley, assistant coach, said. "Anytime we get outside for an extended period of time you hate to go back in. You even have to fight boredom at times."

As a result, the Cats have added a game to their schedule — a 3 p.m. game today against No. 15 Wichita State at Tyler Field in Wichita. On Tuesday, Shocker coach Gene Stephenson called K-State coach Mike Clark and asked if he wanted to add a game.

At this point in the season, the Shockers (4-1) are in need of some games, too.

Hensley said with all the commotion he thought this game would be a good test for the team.

"It will be a good test for us. It will be a good test to see how deep our pitching is," he said. "Weather permitting, we will play six games in five days."

K-State's last win was March 6 against a solid Oklahoma State team. The Cats jumped out to an early 8-0 lead and went on to win the game 8-5, which upped its record to 6-8 and 1-3 in the conference.

Since then, two other games against the Cowboys were canceled, and Wednesday's game against Fort Hays State also was canceled.

Hensley said the team was trying to get back on track and on a winning streak in the next couple of days.

"We have played decent at times this season and just haven't got in a winning role," Hensley said. "Being able to get stronger and tougher as we go is the main thing we want to do right now, but that's difficult because we have a lot of young guys."

Chris Traylor will get the nod for the Cats on the mound. Traylor (1-2) brings an earned-run-average of 4.24 to the mound, but Hensley said he was one of the more solid pitchers on the squad.

"He's been in some battles. We depend on him an awful lot because he has been around," Hensley said. "He's got about as much competitive fire as anyone I've got. He'll do a good job for us."

Forget about North Carolina; Kansas will cut down nets on March 30

Someone out there recently called the Collegian and blasted us for not printing the National Invitational Tournament brackets.

Note to caller: The NIT Tournament is worthless. It's a second-rate tournament for teams that couldn't win road games during the regular season.

Besides, the Cats are already sitting at home watching the real tournament on television along with the rest of us. So it's a good thing we didn't waste the ink.

Even though the Cats got bombed in the first round, Tom Asbury was happy to receive an invitation. After finding out that K-State had obtained a bid to the NIT, Asbury said, "Since we were picked last in our conference, we think we have had a reasonably good year."

Tom, mediocrity is not synonymous with the term reasonably good. It's equivalent to average. And K-State basketball shouldn't be average.

Who knows — maybe Asbury forgot it was the media that picked his team to finish last in the Big 12. Based on the words that passed from Asbury's lips, he now thinks because the media thought the Cats would finish in the basement, mediocrity is just hunky-dory.

Well, it's not.

During the Cats' once-proud basketball history, they went to the NCAA Tournament 22 times. Believe it or not, that ranks 11th among all collegiate basketball programs. During those 22 trips, the Cats made it to the Final Four four times.

It's gotten so horrible around here that the Cats have not won an NCAA Tournament game since 1988.

Recognize the year? That was the year K-State played the Jayhawks for the right to go to the Final Four and lost 71-58. And as we all know, the Jayhawks went on to beat Oklahoma for the national championship.

Ten years have passed, and these days we hold our breath and hope we are offered a bid to the NIT. It's all so sad. Someone needs to resurrect the basketball program. Maybe next year, with a slew of seniors, the Cats can turn it up on the road. We will just have to wait and see.

Now that we have put K-State basketball to bed, let's talk about the real tournament that gets under way today.

We'll start at the top, the Final Four. Drum roll, please.

Arizona. The Wildcats have great guards — two Associated Press first-team All-Americans. Not many teams can play with them when they're hitting on all cylinders. Just ask Asbury. Arizona blasted the Cats 125-87.

Kansas. The Jayhawks have big, strong personnel and can flat out-shoot. Just ask Asbury. Kansas beat the Cats three times this season. If the Hawks can get steady guard play from Ryan Robertson, they'll cut down the nets.

Duke. If Bo knows football, then Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski knows Final Fours. Only John Wooden has more consecutive Final Four appearances than Krzyzewski.

South Carolina. After getting knocked out in the first round last year, the Gamecocks are ready for a tournament run.

No, I'm not smoking crack, and I'm well aware North Carolina is in that bracket.

The championship game will feature a Kansas-Arizona rematch with the Jayhawks taking the title home to Lawrence. After Paul Pierce drops 33 points on Arizona, he'll be named the tournament's MVP.

I know I picked three No. 1 seeds, but hey, I'm on the bandwagon.

Perhaps the most physical matchup in the first round will be Oklahoma vs. Indiana.

Look for Bob Knight to lose his lid when he tries to explain why his team was blown out of the gym by the physical, but low-scoring, Sooners.

For the good of college basketball, let's hope Knight loses quickly.

If you're just filling out your bracket, think ACC. Of the final eight teams, three or four of them should be from the ACC. And don't bet on the Big 12.

By the time the sweet 16 rolls around there will be only one representative left.

SGA ELECTIONS

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN
THURSDAY, MARCH 12, 1998

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE COIN

Hock, Kraai celebrate race; perform karaoke for crowd

KELLEE MILLER
Kansas State Collegian

A rendition of "Heartbreak Hotel" by vice-presidential candidate Bill Kraai at the Flashback Lounge foreshadowed the results of Kraai and his running mate Trey Hock's voter tally.

Hock and Kraai received 168 votes, 5.6 percent of the total voting tally.

Hock, graduate student in English, and Kraai, senior in graphic design, shook hands and thanked each other for a good campaign after they heard the results.

"We came in to this with a mindset that this would be a fun campaign, and it was," Hock said.

Kraai said their main goal of getting their voices heard was accomplished.

"We got to live like rock stars for a couple weeks," Kraai said. "We got our names on posters all over campus and had our names on T-shirts."

Hock and Kraai said they will continue to voice their opinions on their main issue of library support.

"I feel very strongly about funding for the library," Kraai said. "It's still on top of my list."

Hock and Kraai said they were unsure who they would support in the runoff election.

"I want to encourage everyone to get out and vote," Hock said. "Look at the different platforms and make the most educated decision."

Hock said this campaign was the nicest he has been involved with. Hock was a vice-presidential candidate last year.

"I'm happy all-around," he said. "Now I will have more time to focus on my studies."

Hock said his greatest accomplishment this campaign was the number of people who told him they were influenced to run a write-in campaign because of his campaign.

"There were a lot of open seats this election," he said. "We got people talking and made them aware of what's going on."

Hock said he ran a write-in campaign for Student Senate for the Graduate School.

Glendening, Castelano want their issues to be incorporated into next week's runoff

BARBARA HOLLINGSWORTH
Kansas State Collegian

Issues didn't matter to students at the polls, a supporter of Bret Glendening and Shayne Castelano said after the two lost the presidential and vice-presidential election Wednesday night.

Castelano, senior in biochemistry, took the call notifying him of their loss at 10:45 p.m. at O'Malley's Alley. They finished fourth with 7 percent of the vote.

"I'd like to thank you all for your support," Castelano told the group of more than 15 supporters. "I really think that we, by far, had the best campaign."

Some of the issues pushed in that campaign included introducing a Hale Library privilege fee, beginning a program to help students pay off debts faster after graduation and beginning a citywide bus system.

"We still want to push a lot of our issues," Castelano said.

"It's great that a lot of our stuff can still be worked out. We hope that we can get into positions where we can keep these issues in the forefront of people's minds."

To make their goals become a reality, Glendening, senior in agricultural economics and political science, said they would support Greg Davis, senior in marketing and management information systems, and Jim Boomer, senior in marketing information systems and accounting.

"They're fresh faces. They've got new ideas, and they're trustworthy," Glendening said. "We support them all the way. We're looking after the best interest of the students."

"And that's why these two should have won," supporter Jeremy Claeys said as he interrupted Glendening.

Glendening and Castelano's campaign featured real issues with solutions, said Claeys, sophomore in journalism and mass communications and news director at KSDB-FM 91.9.

"Pretty signs are what won," he said, "and the issues that really affect students didn't matter this year."

Castelano said they could have pushed their name more.

"Our issues were awesome. It was just a matter of getting the people," he said.

"I've learned what the people want and what it takes to win."

Despite their loss, both said they would still push the points from their campaign.

"We've talked to some of these candidates and think other candidates will work on the issues with us," Castelano said. "What Bret and I have stood on our whole campaign is stand up for what you say."

As part of the group left the bar before 11 p.m. to relax and to go to the Flashback Lounge to sing karaoke. Glendening offered the remains of his campaign to patrons: "We have shirts if anyone wants to buy. We're selling at a discount."

Van Tyle, Stucky throw their weight behind Davis, Boomer

JOHN HENDERSON
Kansas State Collegian

Wednesday at Longhorn's was a typical night. With no cover charge, folks in cowboy hats and boots had packed the bar and the dance floor by the time the phone call came in at 10:45.

Chris Van Tyle and his running mate, John Stucky, placed third in the 1998 election for student body president and vice president with 17.2 percent of the vote.

Van Tyle, senior in animal sciences and industry and agricultural education, said he was disappointed, but had no regrets about the campaign.

"If we had any regrets, we would've never run," he said.

He and Stucky said they would be endorsing Greg Davis and Jim Boomer, who made the runoff.

"They've run a fair and honest campaign, and we've talked to them, so we know they're good guys," Stucky, junior in agriculture technology management and agricultural economics, said. "They're highly qualified for the job."

Van Tyle said he thought Davis and Boomer were highly devoted to their work, were good about asking others for advice and would work hard for K-State.

"I think they'll do a great job for the campus," he said.

The candidates' campaign of "Common Voice, Logical Choice" had taken them to speak at 14 greek houses and nine other campus groups. Their campaign manager, Justin Nichols, junior in political science, said this was to capitalize on their ease around groups.

"The hardest thing was getting them to wear slacks and a tie and dress up together," Nichols said. "Chris is more comfortable in jeans."

Van Tyle said his choice of wardrobe wasn't so much that he felt more comfortable, but that it was part of his and Stucky's campaign style.

"You just don't see people in shirts and ties on campus all the time," he said. "But at the same time, of course, you've got to look professional."

Van Tyle spent a few songs out on the dance floor two-stepping, something he said he likes to do when he's not so busy being a resident assistant in Haymaker Hall, studying or staying busy any other way.

"I'm rarely in anything but my boots," he said.

Van Tyle has one year experience with Student Governing Association as a student senator, but Stucky has never been active with SGA before the campaign, which helped balance the ticket, Stucky said.

"Some people see it as a disadvantage for one candidate to have no SGA experience," he said. "See, I think there are two kinds of people at K-State. Some are dissatisfied with SGA and want something to change, and some think a candidate should have SGA experience. We kind of complemented

DEATH SENTENCE RETURNS TO KANSAS

Man sentenced to die after 1996 murder of Pitt State student

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GIRARD, Kan. — Nearly 33 years after the last person was executed in Kansas, Gary Kleypas on Wednesday became the first person formally sentenced to death under the state's 4-year-old capital punishment law.

Kleypas, in an orange prison jumpsuit, showed no visible response when he was condemned to die for killing 20-year-old Pittsburg State University student Carrie Williams nearly two years ago.

"May God have mercy on his soul," Judge Donald Noland said while reading the sentence.

Williams' mother, reading a statement in court, said there would be "only sadness for the Kleypas family and Carrie's own family and friends."

The case will automatically be appealed to the state Supreme Court. Kleypas' attorney Ben Wood said he wasn't surprised by the sentence, but he expects the case to be reversed on appeal because it was "riddled with constitutional errors."

For example, he said the judge didn't allow the jury to be recalled after the verdict, even though many jurors said they would have rather sentenced Kleypas to life in prison if they had known he would never be released.

"We'll see," prosecutor John Bork said in response to Wood's belief that Kleypas' case will be overturned. The state had a strong case, Bork said.

"You're always concerned about that, but when I look back on the case and the care the judge took in it, nothing stands out as being particularly worrisome," he said.

Williams' family and friends hugged each other and wiped away tears after the sentencing.

"There is no laughter today, only sadness brought by the actions of one man's choice and the realization that our laws and colleges are more interested in the privacy and rights of a convicted murderer than the safety of our children, students and community," Janie Williams, Carrie's mother, read in court in the family's statement.

She also noted that the jury never heard about or saw a picture of her daughter before the killing. They saw pictures of her body after she had been killed. She pointed out that Kleypas was on parole for another murder when he killed her daughter.

Kleypas, 42, a former nursing student at Pittsburg State University, stabbed Williams to death in her apartment on March 30, 1996. He was arrested two days later at a Springfield, Mo., motel, where he had repeatedly slashed himself. He was convicted July 25.

Kleypas' attorneys filed last-minute motions to stop the death penalty. One motion claimed the state hasn't developed guidelines for administering the sentence. The other said the attempted rape and capital murder convictions constituted double jeopardy. Noland denied them.

He also sentenced Kleypas to more than 17 years in prison for the attempted rape and aggravated burglary charges stemming from Williams' death. When told Kleypas that, with good behavior, he could receive a 15-percent reduction of the lesser sentence for good behavior, Kleypas appeared to nearly chuckle.

He is the first person to receive the death penalty since the state reinstated it in 1994. State officials do not know when the last person was sentenced to death in Kansas.

But George York and James Latham, hanged on June 22, 1965, were the last people to be executed in Kansas. They were accused of killing seven people in five states during a crime spree stretching from Florida to Colorado. Another prisoner was awaiting execution when the U.S. Supreme Court declared capital punishment unconstitutional in 1972. In 1976, the Supreme Court reversed its previous decision and reinstated the death penalty.

During Kleypas' trial, prosecutors showed a videotaped confession in which Kleypas said he killed Williams because he did not know what to do after sexually assaulting her.

Kleypas will be kept with other inmates at El Dorado Correctional Facility. He is expected to be executed at the Lansing Correctional Facility.

The following are excerpts of the statement read by Janie Williams, the mother of Carrie Williams, during Gary Kleypas' sentencing hearing:

"On our daughter Carrie's headstone is engraved 'Listen for the laughter of love.' People who knew Carrie know this best described her personality and life. She loved people and brought joy and laughter to most situations. There will be no laughter of joy today, only sadness for the Kleypas family and Carrie's own family and friends."

"Today is a climax of choices. Years ago, Gary Kleypas chose to brutally murder and sexually violate an elderly woman who lived in Missouri. According to state law, he could have been sentenced to die, but mitigating circumstances allowed him to receive 30 years in prison and after 15 years receive parole. He was paroled to Kansas and given a chance for a new and better life."

"Again, he had a choice, and we believe he chose not to abide with his parole guidelines. We also believe his parole officer chose not to enforce these guidelines. Why have a parole system when both parties are not held accountable for their actions to the citizens of Kansas?"

"On the night of March 30, 1996, Kleypas, with a knife, went to Carrie's apartment and chose again to sexually violate, brutally and violently murder another innocent woman. Before leaving her apartment, he also stole her purse, her money and her engagement ring. Kleypas was found in Missouri, arrested and confessed to his actions. His choices met the criteria of the Kansas death penalty law."

"It was now Carrie's family and the state of Kansas' turn to make a choice. The choice was to ask for the death penalty. Prison, parole, employment and college had not rehabilitated this 40-year-old man."

"So there is no laughter today, only sadness brought by the actions of one man's choice and the realization that our laws and colleges are more interested in the privacy and rights of a convicted murderer than the safety of our children, students and community."

Bill passes to make premeditated murder of children under 14 punishable by death

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The House on Wednesday passed a bill expanding Kansas' death penalty law to make all premeditated killings of children under age 14 a capital crime.

On a vote of 89-32, the House sent the measure to Senate for consideration.

The House spent the better part of an hour Tuesday debating the bill, but avoided a much longer session when opponents of capital punishment decided against trying to repeal the 1994 death penalty law.

Supporters said applying the death penalty to all slayings of children — not just those killed in specific situations — was overdue.

"It makes me sad that we have to talk about people who would snuff out an innocent little life," said Rep. Doug Mays, R-Topeka, the bill's chief sponsor.

"We are talking about the murder of children."

The 4-year-old law makes killing a child a capital crime only when a child is murdered during a kidnapping or a kidnapping with intent to commit a sex crime.

Mays noted lawmakers put together a bill designed to get the necessary votes to pass it in 1994, making it apply to just seven specific types of capital murder, including killing a police officer or when more than one person is murdered at the same time.

"In our rush to pass a capital punishment bill, we didn't realize how flawed it was," Mays said.

The House avoided debating whether Kansas should have a death penalty at all, when Rep. Richard Alldritt decided against offering an amendment repealing capital punishment — a debate the chamber had last year.

"It wasn't the right thing to do today; I bowed to the will of the Democrats," said Alldritt, D-Harper. "When people in here were 8 or 10 years, they made up their minds on this."

But Alldritt did raise the issue in his questioning of Mays.

"I don't understand why people vote for the death penalty, why they think it's a deterrent," Alldritt said. "Whatever law we pass, irrational people won't pay attention to it."

House Minority Leader Tom Sawyer, D-Wichita, said he asked Alldritt to shelve his amendment because, "It would have been a protracted debate and no minds would have been changed. The House hasn't changed since last year."

Earlier, Sawyer failed on a 41-77 vote to replace the death penalty for the premeditated killing of any child with a punishment of life imprisonment without parole and requiring restitution to the victim's family.

"What is the mandatory restitution for the life of a child? You really can't put a value on a child's life," Mays said.

Sawyer said that under his proposal a child murderer "will die in prison; but God decides when they die, not the state."

He argued the death penalty isn't a deterrent and is applied arbitrarily. Sawyer also said since 1970 there have been 59 people released from death rows throughout the nation.

Rep. Michael Farmer, R-Wichita, added amendments allowing a judge or jury to decide whether a life sentence would sufficiently protect the public safety when a prosecutor seeks the death penalty.

Mays said Farmer's proposals would put into law what already is done by the courts and juries.

The bill also was amended by Rep. Joe Kejr, R-Brookville, to ensure the anonymity of the executioner and witnesses to executions.

The amendment also would have death warrants issued by the Kansas Supreme Court for a one-week period rather than for a specific day.

The death penalty law, passed in 1994, calls for execution by lethal injection at Lansing Correctional Facility — where the state's last executions were carried out 1965 when five inmates were hanged.

Corrections officials estimate it will be at least five years before an execution is carried out in Kansas.

Alumni couple plans to create scholarship to K-State students

JILL BUTLER
Kansas State Collegian

After graduating from K-State in 1978, a Nebraska couple has decided to establish a scholarship to give something back in appreciation of K-State.

Timothy Regan graduated from K-State with a bachelor of science in accounting, and Veronica Regan is a graduate in elementary education.

"We felt good about our education we got from K-State," said Veronica Regan, a preschool teacher at the Gingerbread House in Omaha, Neb. "We wanted to give something back to K-State."

Timothy Regan was approached with giving a scholarship to K-State through Secular Company Inc. in Omaha, Neb.

"We knew that the company couldn't give a scholarship," Veronica Regan said. "But we knew we could, and that's what we did."

The value of the scholarship is undetermined. It will be awarded to one student in the College of Education and one student in the College of Business Administration.

"Our hometown is Atchison, Kansas," said Timothy Regan, chief financial officer of the Secular Company. "So, the recipient of this scholarship must be a junior or senior from Atchison County or the state of Nebraska with a 3.5 or better."

The scholarship has been set up by the KSU Foundation.

"We have set up quite a few scholarships like this," said Jeff Chapman, developmental officer at the KSU Foundation and former employee of Secular Company. "It takes several conversations and some time before the scholarship gets set up, and then we see to it that the scholarship is awarded to the right person."

Union to feature Christian music of Satellite Soul

AMY MILLER
Kansas State Collegian

Tim Suttle, lead vocalist for the band Satellite Soul, formerly of Manhattan, said the show Friday night at Union Station will be a welcome stop on the band's tour, thanks to local fans.

"It's funny, we get so busy," he said. "Our booking agent booked 50 concerts in two months. A lot of energy goes into every show, but this time it'll be a little more intense."

Concert info:
Satellite Soul will play at 8 p.m. Friday in Union Station.
Admission is $3.

The band has found success since signing with Ardent/ForeFront, a division of EMI Music, which has produced records for giants such as Madonna and the Spice Girls. "Say I Am," the first single off the band's self-titled release, peaked at number seven on the Christian Hit Radio charts.

"The first single went up so far and then just hung around," Suttle said. "We couldn't even start promoting our second single until the first one came down."

Suttle said it's difficult for him to differentiate between Christian music and other music.

"I don't see the distinction. Music is music. I am a believer, but what I write about is life," he said.

Suttle said deciding on a name for the band was a difficult process for him and the other three members, and at one time they had a list of 200 potential names.

He said a satellite can mean an attendant to a dignitary, and the soul will inherently follow one thing or another.

Satellite Soul plays a blend of straightforward rock, "rootsy rock" and folk rock, he said. The band members have been influenced by such diverse artists as James Taylor, Tom Petty, Led Zeppelin and Sting. Their music ends up sounding similar to the Birds and the Beatles, he said, because of the band's harmonies and Rickenbacker guitars. They also play such diverse instruments as harmonica, hammer and lap dulcimers, keyboards and drums.

Suttle said he understands why the band's music appeals to a wide audience. "Evidently, there is something inside the individual that is spiritual."

Suttle said he's annoyed that much of the Christian culture for young people has become an exclusive subculture.

"It's like the underground music scene in a big city," he said. "If you don't know your way around the culture, you can't be a part of it," he said. "But we wanted to do what we're best at; we wanted to reflect our beliefs and real life."

Ryan Crowell, of Union Program Council, said Satellite Soul's concert Friday night in Union Station is part of the Station Cafe series.

REACH FOR THE SKY

IVAN KOZAR/Collegian

SEVENTEEN PIECES OF ART ARE ON DISPLAY AT THE UNION ART GALLERY FOR THE UNION PROGRAM COUNCIL STUDENT ART SHOW. THE EXHIBIT WILL BE ON DISPLAY UNTIL MARCH 19. THERE WILL BE A RECEPTION FOR THE SHOW AT 5:30 P.M. FRIDAY. THE EVENT IS OPEN TO THE PUBLIC.

Art exhibit fails due to lack of consistency

JON FRANSON
Kansas State Collegian

The concept of 13 x 13 by Thirteen, an art exhibit now at Willard Gallery, is simple. The artwork: 13 inches by 13 inches. The artists: 13 of 'em. Too bad they don't quite pull off the concept.

Many of the pieces are much smaller than the required size; instead, their frames fill the rest of the space. This makes it all the stranger that a couple of pieces that are actually the right size have frames that extend way beyond the limit. Hmm.

The artists don't stop breaking their self-imposed rules there: Only 12 of the 13 artists are on display. So much for lucky 13.

Aside from these nitpicks, the exhibit is enjoyable, though not terribly remarkable.

There doesn't seem to be much to the exhibit. Normally 24 artworks would command an impressive amount of space, but not here. The small pieces are displayed neatly along the wall, at even intervals and equal heights, like they would be at a coffee house.

Indeed, the artists have exhibited at restaurants and coffee houses in their home towns of Minneapolis and St. Paul, Minn.

Each has a different style and chooses a different subject, and the quality of the pieces is just as diverse.

"Change: Grotto #1" and "Change: Grotto #2," by Marilyn Summers Cool, are the best pieces in the exhibit. Both oil pastel/collage pieces feature Gothic, statue like people standing to either side of an opening. Through the opening can be seen a different "change": In the first, smokestacks spew ominous red gas; in the second, a slim, red triangle.

These pieces differ from the others because they challenge viewers to make an interpretation of the works' meaning. If a viewer doesn't want to make that effort, the works are at least aesthetically pleasing.

Another excellent pair of works is Dorothy Odland's "Waterlilies" and "Reflections." These scenes of lakes and greenery are soothing because of the artist's soft brushstrokes of blue, green and white acrylic, surrounded by a gray border.

Other notables are Jim Conway's rustic oil on wood nature scenes and Rita Corrigan's skillful pastel scenes of Venice.

At the other end of the spectrum lie two pieces by Jodi Reeb-Myers: "Water Spirits" and "Leaf Dance."

The first is a grayish blend of textures and colors that is pleasant, but only in the way an excellent pattern of wallpaper is pleasant. The second piece is what looks like a painted green leaf and a piece of red felt, covered by streaks of paint and surrounded by unidentifiable designs. It would not make a good wallpaper choice and seems intended only for those trained to appreciate such "high art."

Two other pieces that fail to inspire are Sally Brown's "Libidinal Choo Choo #2" and "Libidinal Choo Choo #3." These acrylic paintings feature crudely drawn animal/vehicle forms with umbrellas balanced on top, shielding them from a rainstorm. One is to assume, perhaps, that these pink forms represent the unstoppable libido. One is more likely to assume, however, that the pieces were painted by an imaginative 8-year-old. Strictly for the art-enlightened.

Between the two extremes in quality lie other pieces of varying quality, leaning toward the better extreme.

13 x 13 by Thirteen is nothing groundbreaking, but it is worth at least a few minutes of perusing between classes. The exhibit runs through Friday.

Lunchbag Theatre offers students soap opera alternatives with plays

DIANE LEE
Kansas State Collegian

Lunchbag Theatre offers a break from the traditional noon time soap opera scene with this season's third performance at 11:30 a.m. today in the Purple Masque Theatre.

Lunchbag Theatre is a culmination of the efforts of the acting and directing workshop class taught by Lew Shelton, associate professor of theater. Students gain experience in acting and directing through active participation in one-act plays.

Each actor performs in two plays, and each director stages two plays in the course of the semester.

This gives students a chance to participate in productions that are completely guided and performed by other students.

Today's performance is "Desdemona: A Play About A Handkerchief," written by Paula Vogel.

"It is the character Desdemona from Shakespeare's play 'Othello.' She is exposed as not quite the innocent wife Shakespeare portrays her as," Shelton said.

This view of Desdemona presents a character with a secret life hidden from Othello's watchful eye.

"In this one she's a very sexual woman who has been cheating on Othello by working in Bianca's brothel," Shelton said.

In another change from "Othello," Desdemona's relationships with other women are explored in this play.

"This is a different view of Desdemona and her relationship with Emilia and Bianca, more from a female perspective," Shelton said.

"Desdemona" is a humorous take on Shakespeare's Desdemona but expresses some very adult themes through its explicit nature.

"It is fairly overt about some of the sexual things. I don't recall any obscene language, but they do simulate an S&M scene," Shelton said.

Admission is free, and patrons are encouraged to bring a sack lunch.

Next week's productions will be 11:30 a.m. Tuesday and Thursday in the Purple Masque Theatre. Thursday's play will be "Extensions," a comedy by Murray Schisgal that centers around two Vaudeville performers.

There will be more Lunchbag Theatre after spring break, when the second half of the season begins.

K-State produces 3 Truman Scholarship finalists

AMY EBERT
Kansas State Collegian

K-State is continuing its tradition as a top scholar-producing university. Three of the finalists for the Truman Scholarship are K-State students. K-State ranks first in the nation among state universities in the number of Truman Scholars.

Ryan Bock, junior in political science and French; Sam Halabi, junior in political science; and Tim Riemann, senior in agricultural economics and pre-law, are all finalists for the $30,000 scholarship for graduate study.

The scholarships are awarded to junior-level students who are preparing to attend graduate school and pursue a career in public service. Scholarship winners must be committed to a career in government or nonprofit and advocacy sectors that help protect resources or needy or disadvantaged persons.

Each of the finalists has spent many hours in public service activities, ranging from campus service groups and student government to community projects such as the Head Start program and the UFM Mentoring Program for Juvenile Defenders. The candidates have varying reasons for being involved in public service.

"My parents encouraged me early on to be active in public service, and I've always had a fascination for the environment," Halabi said.

Riemann said he is dedicated to public service because of the tremendous need for it and also to give back to the communities that have helped him.

"Public service is a tremendously good way to give back to a community or nation that has propelled you forward," he said.

All three finalists said they have aspirations to work at an international level in public service.

Bock, who has studied French for eight years, said his interest in public service has grown through his studies at K-State.

He said he would like to work in Africa because of its continuous political changes.

"The recent political developments there are interesting. It seems like all the action is in Africa, plus it correlates well with the French I've studied," Bock said.

"I'd like to take the foreign service exam, which is a pretty tough test because only 6 percent of the people who take it pass. With that, I'd like to work for the state department of the International Relations Council," he said.

Halabi said he wants to work in public service in the Middle East.

"I'm interested in working on water policy in the Middle East," Halabi said. "Water allocation, mostly water conflicts between countries, is what I'm interested in."

Riemann said he would like to work at an international level on policy making.

"I'd like to eventually do international policy making. There are many divisions of the Department of State or the USDA where I could work and make a difference," Riemann said.

The candidates are working to prepare for the final interview Friday. Beth Powers, academic adviser, works with the finalists in their preparations. Each goes through a series of practice interviews with K-State faculty. They also spend time researching their topic of interest.

"I'm reading about everything I can get my hands on. I go to lectures, listen to NPR and talk with friends to see how I affect people," Halabi said.

Riemann, who was a finalist for the scholarship last year, said his experience with the process has helped him focus on his presentation.

"It's nice to have a little bit of an idea of what to expect in the big interview, the experience never hurts," Riemann said.

Bock said he also spends a lot of time reading about African politics, but he doesn't mind the work.

"There's a lot of reading, like 20 articles every week to read," Bock said. "But as for the toughest part of the process, the application itself was the most difficult part of it."

Student teachers gain knowledge from real classroom experience

► KINDERGARTEN CLASS BENEFITS FROM FRESH FACE OF STUDENT TEACHER.

SARA ZENGER
Kansas State Collegian

It's been said that everything one needs to know one learns in kindergarten.

For Lindsay Brinkley, senior in elementary education and special education, this saying has become even more true.

Brinkley is student teaching this semester in a kindergarten class at Lee Elementary School in Manhattan. For 16 weeks, she is responsible for everything a teacher is and does, including lesson plans, faculty meetings and the classroom.

"I didn't realize all the little things teachers had to do. I'm always planning or doing something. When I was taking classes, I never studied on Saturdays. Now I find myself at home on a Saturday afternoon previewing tapes I want to show in class," Brinkley said.

Gail Shroyer, coordinator of professional development schools for the College of Education, said student teaching is a time for students to put what they have learned to practice.

"They see what it's like to have control of a classroom. They do everything teachers do," Shroyer said.

"They pull all their classwork together. It's the best look at what it means to be a teacher."

Brinkley said she decided to become a teacher when she volunteered to coach a softball team for the Special Olympics.

A boy who had Down Syndrome and didn't have any arms asked if he could pitch.

"I had no idea how he was going to do it, but I told him he could. Then he rolled the ball on his foot and pitched it. Ever since then I have wanted to teach," Brinkley said.

A few weeks in the classroom haven't changed Brinkley's mind either. She said the experience has lived up to her expectations.

"I just hoped that when the teacher left the room I wouldn't freak out," Brinkley said.

"But it's an amazing experience. You have 20 little pairs of eyes staring at you, and they get so excited about learning."

Even though kindergarten lasts only half a day, Brinkley's day is longer than some college students. She arrives at school at 7:45 a.m. to prepare for the day. Because she is responsible for both morning and afternoon classes, she often doesn't return home until after 5 p.m. Brinkley is also responsible for preparing all the lessons and activities for the classes.

"The lessons have to be a combination of science, social studies, language arts and math. We look at books that relate to the lessons and read to them a lot. They also have an activity every day like P.E., music or computers," Brinkley said.

Brinkley is teaching under Patti McCrary, kindergarten teacher at Lee Elementary. Even though McCrary is still in the classroom every day, she has given Brinkley the opportunity to experience having her own class.

"I've tried to give her as much opportunity to develop units as she wanted to. I've given her some direction but haven't told her how to teach. I've been there to back her up," McCrary said.

McCrary said not only does Brinkley receive valuable experience student teaching, but also her class benefits from having a new face in the room.

"She has a fresh outlook on things. She brings new ideas about teaching and enthusiasm to the class," McCrary said.

Brinkley said she has found that kindergarten isn't exactly how she remembers it.

"There's no nap time," Brinkley said. "We also teach actual subjects. The students don't realize that because we try to make it fun, but we do worry about getting the subjects in."

Actually being in charge of a class hasn't changed Brinkley's plans for the future at all. She said the experience has only raised her already high opinion of the profession.

"I like the way the kids respond when they learn. They get excited," Brinkley said.

"I just think this is great. It's the best feeling in the world."

New associate dean to continue to work extensively with students

SHERYL WILLIAMS
Kansas State Collegian

For Larry Erpelding, working closely with agriculture students at each stage of their education process has been a pleasure.

Erpelding has worked extensively with students as associate director of academic programs in the College of Agriculture and said he hopes to continue to be actively involved with agriculture students and their activities in his new position.

After a national search, Erpelding was named on March 4 as successor of retiring David Mugler, associate dean for academic programs.

"It has just been a terrific experience working here in the College of Agriculture," Erpelding said.

"I've had the opportunity to work with students all the way from pre-counseling, helping them decide upon majors before they are here as students, working with them as new students and continuing with them throughout our program and then working with them after they graduate, because we have a very strong alumni organization," he said.

Erpelding received his undergraduate and graduate degrees at K-State and took various positions before returning in 1977, including director of the agriculture program at Colby Community College and a teaching position at Ohio State University.

While at Ohio State, he established a student-teaching program for post-secondary teachers in agriculture who would teach at the technical college level.

In addition to working more with agriculture faculty and supporting their efforts, Erpelding said he will focus on several goals he has in mind for the College of Agriculture based on the changing needs expressed by the agriculture industry.

"Those goals would be to provide our students with more international experiences, whether that be short-term tours, or longer-term internships or study-abroad programs, and also to support our effective teaching through the use of technology," Erpelding said.

Erpelding said he thought the College of Agriculture has done a good job of providing students with opportunities to solve problems and to think critically and creatively through the use of real industry problems.

He said he envisions it moving more into those areas. "Our industry is demanding that of our graduates," he said.

Marc Johnson, dean of the College of Agriculture, said Erpelding has helped lead a high-performance undergraduate program at K-State that includes numerous national awards for quality of teaching by faculty, regular national-winning competitive teams and numerous clubs that have won outstanding club awards at the national level.

"K-State has a very high performance in the College of Agriculture teaching program, and Larry has been a part of leading that effort," Johnson said.

"We're fortunate that he has an interest in taking the chief operating officer's position for our academic programs."

Mugler said much of what has been accomplished in the agriculture college in recent years has been the direct result of Erpelding's leadership.

"I believe he will provide excellent leadership for our teaching program as we move into the 21st century," Mugler said.

"I feel strongly about his leadership, his people skills, his character. He has a real passion for students."

Erpelding said Mugler has been effective in working with students, faculty and fellow administrators.

"He has been a tremendous model in team building," Erpelding said. "My challenge is to maintain all of the positive things that have happened in the College of Agriculture, and to move the program in the direction that we will need to go in order to best serve our students, the employers of those students and the agricultural industry, as we move into the next millennium."

Mann, Macklin to make plans for runoff election

We didn't expect to have to wait so long for the results," he said. "I've about worn out this piece of gum."

"If we would have lost, we would have been thrilled just by all the show of the support and the encouragement we've gotten."

Macklin said he plans to work non-stop next week to get the extra 10 percent.

There were about 130 supporters at the election party and all were enthusiastic about the results. Wayne Becker, junior in interior architecture, said Mann and Macklin have a good chance in the runoff.

"I was still disappointed in the voter turnout, but I think Mann and Macklin have a good chance because they have a lot of support," he said.

Kate Wooldridge, sophomore in speech pathology, said she wasn't disappointed there is a runoff.

"I think it will be a good test of their patience. It's exciting," she said.

Ryan Evans, junior in mechanical engineering, said he was disappointed there is a runoff.

"Ideally I was hoping for an outright win, but there were so many good candidates," he said. "I knew that it would come down to a runoff. If this campaign continues to work hard, I'm sure that it will be a clear majority next time."

got their ear to the ground listening for what people want."

Now all that Davis and Boomer can do is wait, regenerate their campaign and try to get more people at the voters booths for them next Tuesday.

Davis said they plan to wait for the results again next week at 12th Street.

"All we can do is keep promoting up what we stand for and keep doing what we've done all along," Boomer said. "In the end we'll be fine."

into Senate as a graduate student.

Hock said they got less support this year because all the campaign platforms were similar.

"There was a high competency among all the candidates this year," he said. "It made it hard to decide."

Hock said after his second year in the campaign race, he won't run again next year, but he would probably talk someone else into it.

Kraai said he plans to graduate this spring, but if he is here next year, he plans to run again.

Kraai said he has been involved in four campaigns at K-State.

"Each year has been a lot of fun," Kraai said. "I'm glad I got to run with Trey this year. We've been friends a long time, and he was a great running mate."

Hock said their tradition of throwing a silver dollar into the Kansas River for good luck was done in spirit this year.

"We simply waved," Hock said.

that pretty well."

Both candidates were noticeably less talkative once the results came in, but gratefully accepted hugs and handshakes from supporters.

"The voters said what they said,"

Van Tyle said.

"I learned a lot," Stucky said.

Van Tyle said he was thankful for all the support he and Stucky received during and after the campaign.

"We have no bad feelings about the final vote," he said. "I wish they'd been a little higher, but it's all right."

Dog owner gets probation after pleading no contest

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JUNCTION CITY — A man whose three Rottweiler dogs mauled an 11-year-old boy to death pleaded no contest and faces probation, more than a month after his wife was convicted of more serious charges and sentenced to more than 12 years in prison.

Jeffrey Davidson, 41, reached a plea agreement with prosecutors in Geary County District Court. He pleaded no contest to involuntary manslaughter before Judge George Scott.

"The state's agreed not to oppose probation," prosecutor Chris Biggs said. The decision was made after reviewing his involvement in the case and after discussing the matter with the victim's family, Biggs said.

He said Davidson has agreed to extended probation of five years with a special condition: that he have no dogs. His formal sentencing is scheduled for April 1.

Scott dismissed more serious charges, including unintentional second degree murder — what Davidson's wife, Sabine Davidson, was convicted of in January. Sabine Davidson of rural Milford, 27, also was convicted of child endangerment in the April 24, 1997, death of fifth-grader Christopher Wilson.

Wilson and his younger brother, Tramell, were waiting for a school bus when they were attacked by the dogs owned by Sabine and Jeffrey Davidson. The boys climbed a tree to escape, but Christopher Wilson got down when the bus arrived and was attacked.

Sabine Davidson must serve 80 percent of her sentence on the murder charge — almost 10 years — before being eligible for parole. She remains free on $50,000 bond while her court-appointed attorney, Ronald Hodgson of Manhattan, files an appeal.

At her trial, she testified that she acquired the three Rottweilers to take part in Schutzhund training, a working-dog sport that involves trials of dog obedience, tracking and protection.

She had one animal put to sleep because it was too aggressive toward children. She gave up Schutzhund clubs after the birth of her third child in November 1996. After the deadly attack, all three animals were killed.

Some area residents testified they had complained to authorities about the dogs.

One, a highway patrol trooper who lived nearby, said he saw the dogs running loose while the Davidsons were on vacation and their neighbor's husband was caring for the dogs.

But Sabine Davidson testified no one ever told her the dogs were running loose or that they were chasing anyone. She would have tried to contain the animals, she said. Failing that, "I would've had them put to sleep," she said.

Two K-State legends squared off in a historic match Thursday afternoon. President Jon Wefald played four matches of table tennis Thursday afternoon against former student body president Chris Hansen at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

The game ended in a tie, each man having won two matches.

"We thought we'd quit while we're ahead," Hansen said.

"That way we'll be friends forever," Wefald added.

Hansen said he had wanted to play Wefald for two years.

At a retreat sponsored by the Kansas Board of Regents, Wefald beat all the board members and the other presidents of regents schools in table tennis at about the same time Hansen was elected student body president.

"I'm pretty much undefeated in table tennis," Wefald joked.

Hansen, senior in nuclear engineering, had asked Wefald to play as a graduation present.

Wefald said he was impressed with Hansen's game.

"It was an epic struggle of titanic proportions," he said. "I'm all sweaty."

House leaders hoping to snare Graves' support

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Leaders of the House committee that drafted a plan to restructure governance of higher education in Kansas said Thursday they were encouraged after meeting with Gov. Bill Graves that he will support it eventually.

"It was very productive," said Rep. David Adkins, R-Leawood, chairman of the House Select Committee on Higher Education.

The House is expected to debate the bill by the middle of next week.

Graves' chief spokesman, tempered the enthusiasm of Adkins and Rep. Ed McKechnie, D-Pittsburg, ranking Democrat on the committee, that their meeting had improved chances Graves would wind up endorsing the plan.

"He still has concerns about coordination and, probably more importantly, the $150 million hole (budget deficit) that this will create in the out years."

Mike Matson said Graves doesn't want "to throw any cold water" on the proposal, but wants more information and clarification.

Matson said Graves believes the select committee's proposal and one by last year's legislative study committee, led by Rep. Cindy Empson, R-Independence, can serve as blueprints for pursuing the issue in future years if the House plan doesn't pass this year.

"He wants to view this as kind of a work in progress," Matson said.

The select committee's plan would replace the Kansas Board of Regents with a state Council on Higher Education that would govern the six present state universities and Washburn University of Topeka, and would coordinate the state's 19 community colleges and 11 vocational schools and technical colleges.

While the bill spells out that coordination means approving community college courses to eliminate duplication and reviewing mission statements, Graves continues to be bothered by what it would mean in practice.

"I think he wants to make certain the community colleges understand exactly what the council's coordination powers will be," Adkins said.

TCI increases broadcast hours for Univision

ANGELA KISTNER
Kansas State Collegian

For the past few years, the Hispanic American Leadership Organization has worked to bring Univision, a Spanish cable television channel, to Manhattan.

On March 1, HALO's goal became a reality.

Univision is shown on channel 19 from 11 p.m. to noon on weekdays and from 11 p.m. to 5 p.m. on weekends.

TCI General Manager Richard Cofer said Univision originally was to be shown from midnight to noon everyday. But because of repeated shows and commercials on Knowledge TV, which is also shown on channel 19, TCI was able to expand Univision, he said.

"We did our best in trying to provide as much programming as possible for Univision," Cofer said.

HALO faculty adviser and associate professor of modern languages Doug Benson said he and HALO members are glad TCI gave Univision more programming.

"We're very grateful that Mr. Cofer is continuing

Improving crosswalk lighting on Denison planned for within 2 months, Senate told

Improvements to crosswalk lighting along Denison Avenue will be made within the next two months, Bill Muir, faculty representative to Student Senate and assistant to the vice president for institutional advancement, told senators at their meeting Thursday.

Muir is also a member of the City/University Tax Fund Committee, which allocates money from sales tax collected on campus to projects that benefit K-State and Manhattan. The committee and the Manhattan City Commission have already approved 10 lighting improvements, but those aren't scheduled to take place until 1999.

Muir said Vice President for Administration and Finance Tom Rawson has made the three improvements on Denison a top priority.

"In response to the accident that happened on Denison last week, the Denison lighting projects have been bumped up to where they will be accomplished in the next two months from university funds," Muir said.

Last week, Mindy Hines, freshman in musical theater, was struck by a car as she crossed Denison between Durland and Goodnow halls.

Muir said more overall lighting will be added at the crosswalks on Denison near West Stadium and Durland Hall.

Problems with other crosswalks on campus still exist, he said, but many should be corrected when the other scheduled improvements begin next year.

"There's a lot of problems that are associated with the crosswalks, especially with the Goodnow crossings, that need to be addressed," Muir said. "But at least part of the solutions to these problems are being moved up so there will be more lighting on Denison this spring."

Retired KSU engineering professor, 86, dies after illness at Mercy Health Center

A former K-State engineering professor died Wednesday at Mercy Health Center on College Avenue. Alley Hugh Duncan, 86, joined the Department of Mechanical Engineering faculty in 1946 as a teacher of thermodynamics. He retired from K-State in 1978.

According to a release by Edwards-Yorgensen-Meloan

Funeral Home, Duncan was a member of the First United Methodist Church of Manhattan, the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and the Sertoma Club of Manhattan. He was also a Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 board member from 1952 to 1960.

Duncan was a resident of University Park Community in Manhattan and was admitted to Mercy following an illness.

Duncan has willed his body to the University of Kansas Medical School Department of Anatomy for research. The time and place for a memorial are undetermined.

Duncan is survived by his wife, Avis Hobbie Duncan, and four sons: Noel Duncan of Knoxville, Tenn.; Lloyd Duncan of Dallas; Jerry Duncan of Bettendorf, Iowa; and Merle Duncan of Lawrence.

Performance artist to give presentation for Asian-American Awareness Month

Dan Kwong, a Japanese-Chinese-American performance artist, will present "Smash Hits and Pop Flies" at 8 tonight in Union Little Theatre as part of Asian-American Awareness Month.

Sook Siyajuck, junior in general business management and president of the Asian-American Student Union, said he is looking forward to hearing Kwong speak. He said the union really wanted Kwong, who is from Santa Monica, Calif., to come to K-State and perform during Asian-American Awareness Month.

"I feel like Kwong represents all the Asian-Americans pretty well. I grew up the same way he did. I heard one of his lectures, and it seemed like it was me standing up there," Siyajuck said.

Siyajuck said Kwong is giving a multimedia performance focusing on the pressures of growing up in two cultures, as an Asian and an American.

"He will be describing his family and the perspectives they have on American culture, and how Americans looked at his family and what those consequences were," Siyajuck said.

Siyajuck said the implications of such an environment were often drastic.

"I used to think my skin color was white because I was around white-colored skin so much," he said.

Siyajuck said the presentation will allow audience members to gather a better understanding of what obstacles Asian-Americans must overcome while growing up.

"It is different from other groups. When we were growing up, we would go to school and be taught one thing and then come home and be taught another. It causes you to lose your identity," Siyajuck said.

Along with Kwong's presentation, Siyajuck said there are going to be other events through the remainder of the month to promote Asian-American awareness.

There will be a martial arts show at noon Monday in the Union Courtyard. "The Joy Luck Club" will be showing at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the Little Theatre. A "Taste of Asia" food sampling will occur at 5 p.m. Wednesday in the International Student Center.

Psychology professor to speak on effects of protesters on women seeking abortions

Catherine Cozzarelli, associate professor of psychology, will be giving a presentation on the effects of pro-life picketers on women seeking abortions at 3:30 p.m. Monday in Blumont 5102.

The presentation, "Anti-Abortion Picketing: Its history and impact on women having abortions," is aimed at showing the stress level the picketers present.

"Abortion itself is a stressful situation," Cozzarelli said. "We considered everything involved in coping with abortions, and the picketers were part of it."

For her research, Cozzarelli said she performed two separate studies in the Buffalo, N.Y., area.

The first study involved one clinic and 291 women. For the second study, Cozzarelli received a grant from the National Institute of Mental Health, and two clinics were studied.

"We had 450 women in the second survey and compiled the information over two years," she said. "We focused more on the effects of picketing on a long-term basis."

Cozzarelli also said this research might be the only one of its kind.

"As far as we know, this is the only data on this kind of information."

Sunset Zoo plans to build amphitheater to satisfy need for more children's shows

Sunset Zoological Park will build an amphitheater this summer to meet rising demands for children's shows at the zoo, spokeswoman Angie Fenstermacher said.

Last year, Sunset Zoo put on programs for more than 25,000 people, she said. These programs help educate people about the zoo and its animals.

"We have so many school kids coming in April and May, we are almost double-booked," she said.

Fenstermacher said the amphitheater will help them serve students more effectively. It will be used for educational programs, performances and special events.

It will be set up like a performance stage where the zoo plans to feature bands and other entertainment as well, she said.

The amphitheater will be in the center of the zoo and will seat about 100 people. Seating will be constructed from limestone. The amphitheater will be surrounded by trees, Fenstermacher said.

This structure will be the zoo's second amphitheater.

Construction will begin this spring and will cost between $20,000 and $25,000, she said. A large portion of the funding will come from donations.

The opening performance is scheduled for Sept. 6. The act will be the "Cool Cats Jazz Festival," a concert featuring various jazz performers.

Shop owners uneasy 1 month after fire

ALECIA TERRELL
Kansas State Collegian

The atmosphere Saturday in Aggieville during St. Patrick's Day festivities likely will be much different than it was exactly one month before.

Saturday marks the one-month anniversary of a three-alarm fire that destroyed four businesses in the 1100 block of Moro Street.

Most of the business owners affected by the fire said they are waiting for contractors and insurance companies to give them answers about insurance coverage and construction costs. Most said they plan to rebuild.

For related stories
Stories about the Aggieville fire can be found by searching the eCollegian archives. Point your browser to collegian.ksu.edu/search/.

"I do know that I want to stay in Aggieville," Gaines said his life has been greatly affected by the loss of his business.

"I haven't had pizza in three weeks," he said. "To me, the bulk of the loss was all the hard work and effort we put into this business."

Gaines said he was happy to hear that most of his 25 employees had found new jobs.

Other businesses destroyed by the fire included Club Karrington, Adventure Travel and Speed Wash Laundromat. The Futon Store had extensive damage and is closed for repairs.

Bob Fair, owner of Speed Wash Laundromat, said his insurance plan didn't cover his entire business.

"I want to rebuild, but I don't know if I'll be able to afford it," Fair said. "I'm working with the contractors to see what the actual damages were."

"The laundromat wasn't directly affected by the fire. Most of the damage came from a wall that collapsed on to our roof from the building next door."

Fair said this was his only business, and if he can't afford to rebuild, he will probably retire. He said he had a few part-time employees whom he will continue to pay for now.

Charlie Busch, owner of the building that housed Club Karrington and Adventure Travel, and his wife, Connie, owner of the travel agency, were both unavailable for comment. Adventure Travel is being run from the Busch's home.

Though some businesses weren't really affected by the fire, their employees said they still feel a significant loss to the block of Moro.

Dave Gardiner, shift supervisor of the Pizza Hut on Moro, said he was upset to see what had happened.

"I really miss the building that used to be there," he said. "It's just not the same."

Pizza Hut's only damage from the fire was broken windows in the front of the building.

Most other business owners and students said they would be happy if Club Karrington and the other destroyed buildings could be rebuilt.

"It's kind of weird not having anything there. It really wouldn't make much of a difference to me if the same businesses were rebuilt. I wouldn't even mind seeing something new," Nikki Freeman, senior in management, said.

Gina Pyle, senior in management, said she never went to Club Karrington.

"It was such a new business that most people still referred to it as Bomber's," she said. "I do feel sorry for those people that lost their businesses."

Manhattan Fire Department Assistant Chief Steve Burnett said arson has been ruled out as the cause of the fire, but investigators don't know exactly what started it.

"With the amount of debris, we couldn't find an exact cause," he said. "We do know there were no flammable liquids used."

Contractors have the cleanup process under way.

"It's not untypical that this cleanup will take a while," Burnett said. "But it appears as if most of the businesses are on their way to rebuilding."

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Relax, Earthlings. That asteroid streaking toward our planet is going to miss by miles. Actually, by 600,000 miles, according to new calculations.

Just a day after one group of astronomers reported that an asteroid was expected to pass within 30,000 miles of the Earth's center and could possibly collide, astronomers at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory said their calculations — based on newly uncovered data — indicate the asteroid will pass no closer than 600,000 miles away.

"We are saying now that the probability of an impact is zero," said Donald K. Yeomans of JPL. "It poses no threat to the Earth whatsoever."

Yeomans said he and fellow astronomer Paul W. Chodas dug out some 8-year-old pictures of the heavens taken by the Palomar Observatory telescope and found the photos contained images of asteroid 1997 XF11, which then was just an unidentified point of light.

Brian G. Marsden of the International Astronomical Union, the astronomer who made the calculations released on Wednesday, could not immediately be reached for comment.

Steve Maran, an astronomer with the American Astronomical Society, said Marsden's calculations were based only on limited data.

"They got more information about the orbit," Maran said of Yeomans and Chodas. "They should have a much better estimate. This should certainly be more reliable because it is based on more data."

By looking at the 1990 pictures, Maran said Yeomans and Chodas, in effect, have a total of eight years of orbital measurements about the asteroid.

"You really do need an intensive set of observations to really nail it down," he said.

On Wednesday, Marsden had issued a notice that the asteroid was expected to pass within only 30,000 miles of the Earth's center.

"The chance of an actual collision is small, but one is not entirely out of the question," he concluded.

Those calculations were based on short measurements taken just last week and included less of the asteroid's orbital path than the archival pictures from Palomar.

Yeomans said that after hearing of the other, IAU forecast, astronomers at JPL sought out the archival photos and did the new calculations.

Even though the asteroid will pass outside of the Earth-moon complex, Yeomans said it still will be spectacularly close for an object that is about one mile across.

The asteroid will pass within about 6 million miles of the Earth on Halloween, 2002, giving scientists a chance to more accurately estimate its orbital path, Yeomans said.

"That is a golden scientific opportunity to study this thing" using radar and a variety of telescopes, Yeomans said.

Even though the Earth now appears safe from asteroid 1997 XF11, thousands of other asteroids that, theoretically, could one day approach the Earth are still out there, Maran said.

"This whole exercise was a useful reminder of the fact that these things can, in fact, hit the Earth," Maran said.

Dog owners' sentencing closes gruesome chapter

One of the longest, saddest stories ever told by the Collegian and other Kansas news agencies ended Thursday with the no-contest plea to involuntary manslaughter by Jeffrey Davidson. Davidson and his wife, Sabine, owned three Rottweilers that attacked and killed Christopher Wilson while he and his brother waited for the school bus in Milford, Kan., last April. Ten days ago, Sabine Davidson was sentenced to more than 13 years in prison after she was found guilty of unintentional second-degree murder.

The Collegian staff who covered the scene of the attack and the court hearings afterwards remembers the lack of acknowledgement from either of the Davidsons and how it contrasted with the pain-filled testimony from members of the Milford community. The rest of us who have watched the case unfold commend the legal system for bringing the Davidsons to justice within a year of the original incident. The Davidsons' charge was the first time the legal term "murder" was applied to the owner of a dog that killed a human being. If the term was ever meant to be applied in this way, it certainly applies to a case where two people kept three dangerous animals poorly caged and left to run loose in a neighborhood where children lived. It certainly applies to people who ignore the warnings of more experienced trainers that their animals were disasters waiting to happen, and instead train the animals to be vicious before they train them to be obedient. It certainly applies to people who sleep in while their animals are acting out their training on the body of an 11-year-old with a busload of children watching it happen. There can never be any winners in a case where a child dies and one person is sent to prison. Justice can sometimes be a consolation, but rarely much of one. We offer our sincerest condolences to Chris Wilson's parents and to his brother Trammel. Maybe they can go on with their lives, quietly, without the world watching and wanting to talk. Maybe people will be more careful to train and keep their dogs properly. Chris Wilson didn't ask to make history. But maybe he can rest easier now that life can go on.

TRIALS AND TRIBULATIONS OF A '90s WOMAN

Vacuous beauty pageants prolong negative image of females, spark harassment

There's the whole monthly bout of cramps. There's the inborn need to shear our bodies of any hair that's not on our heads (eyebrows sometimes excluded) or other not-so-comfy-to-shave areas. There's the whole cellulite issue, not to mention looking forward to menopause and osteoporosis. These things — the sum of which equals being a woman — I can handle. But it seems to me that there is a lot of fine print to this deal I don't recall reading before I signed.

The term "sexual harassment" conjures images of the Clarence Thomas hearings, during which we were presented the dilemma on how exactly "harassment" was pronounced and secretaries getting their rumps squeezed at the water cooler. While things like sexual harassment only seem to strike adult women by people who are "superior" to them, such things can begin to take hold of a girl when she's very young, by her peers.

In fact, I can remember being sexually harassed by the opposite sex as far back as elementary school — by boys on the playground, by my babysitter's brother, etc.

It's almost like women are groomed early to understand their sexual inferiority, to understand that their bodies are not truly their own.

Naturally, children grow up, and as they get older, low-key playground stuff gets turned up a notch.

Maybe it's the bigger a woman's breasts get, the more severe the harassment she'll receive. In the fifth grade, Wilbur turned to me in the middle of "E.T." and told me he was going to rape me.

In the eighth grade, Travis gave me a booklet he had made, filled with tampon and douche ads he had cut out of magazines.

After my senior year in high school, a man in Germany grabbed me around my waist as I passed him on the sidewalk. A few weeks ago, someone asked me if my breasts had gotten bigger.

Women as objects is such a cauldron of bubbling anger. It's easy to blame men for this stigma — perhaps a little too easy. No one, woman or man, girl or boy, ever deserves any type of harassment.

However, many women feed into the idea of women as objects, which somehow translates into a theoretical "Door's open" for every other female. Women exploit themselves on the Internet, on television, in magazines, creating an unsaid understanding that all women are merely toys — something for people to masturbate to.

This is not to say that we as women need to cover up our beautiful bodies or be ashamed of them. But when women sell that beauty for someone else's cheap thrills, we're all exploited in one way or another. What's really sickening is how mainstream much of this pimping out of women is. And I'm not talking about Dr. Love's.

Tuesday night, the Miss U.S.A. Pageant was on. First of all, I hardly think a competition that is really looking for that smart, well-rounded woman would have a swimsuit competition — believe it or not, our brains aren't in our tits or asses. But that's all good — these women chose to participate. What I don't understand is why.

These were all most likely intelligent (with the exception of Miss Massachusetts, who said the historical figure she looked up to was "The Garden of Eden") and successful women. These are women who probably are champions for the plight of females worldwide, which is why I find the scenario so vexing. Going on national television to be judged mainly on the superficial aspects of their beings doesn't say much about the rest of us women, who can only watch and cringe in embarrassment. (And please don't tell me they are really judged on their intelligence. If they were, would they be asked "What would you do if your boyfriend gave you a virtual pet for Valentine's Day?")

The issue at hand isn't about assigning blame to one sex or the other, however. It's just all too easy to be harassed these days.

Sure, there are policies here and there about sexual harassment, but not on playgrounds.

What protects a woman when someone she considers a friend is doing the harassing? Somehow, in our quest for political correctness, for liberty and justice for all, we've decided that a few "lighthearted" jokes about a person's sexuality is OK. In fact, the lines have become so skewed, the harasses may think they're being real clever when they comment on someone else's body or personal life.

The word harassment never seems to enter their minds.

And, sadly enough, most of us women signed on the dotted line in pen.

Court's decision to allow homosexual Scouts leaves it with black mark, bad deed for day

VIEWPOINT

SAM SACKETT

Sam is a sophomore in public relations. You can send e-mail to Sam at sjs8645@ksu.edu.

The Boy Scouts of America has its work cut out for it. And this time it doesn't involve setting up tents.

The recent decision by the Appellate Division of the State Superior Court of New Jersey said homosexuals have the right to join the Boy Scouts. This decision ties a snug knot around the freedom of the Scouts. Do Scouts have the right to ban a member or leader because he is openly gay?

I think so. The court's decision poses serious consequences — and not just for the Scouts. If a voluntary association (and I stress voluntary) can't uphold its own rules and regulations, then what is the purpose in joining any club? Being a member of an organization usually entails meeting certain requirements and following a standard set of rules that apply to all members. So why the big cry over banning gays? They don't meet the standards — they don't join the Scouts.

I'm proud to see the BSA take a stand against what is wrong — both morally and for liberty's sake. It is upholding values that have led to America's success. And it has been doing this since 1910. This whole incident really started when it became publicly known that Scout leader James Dale was gay. The Boy Scouts basically said, "See ya!"

Dale then took the BSA to court. This lower court gave the victory to the BSA, saying that it was justified in expelling him. The reasoning was that the Boy Scouts have the right to believe what they want. If they want to uphold a standard of morality, then that is their right. The court called homosexuality "a serious moral wrong."

The court called homosexuality "a serious moral wrong."

I am supporting it because I believe that it has provided tremendous opportunities for millions of youth. And I don't want to see this excellence tainted.

I have read the Scout's official law, oath, motto and slogan. They are impressive. And I can find no reasonable explanation for opposition against the Scouts.

Here are the traits taken directly from the BSA Law: trustworthy, loyal, helpful, friendly, courteous, kind, obedient, cheerful, thrifty, brave, clean and reverent. I hope the Scouts' practice of developing character is something Americans still want. Character might be old-fashioned, but it's never outdated. Maybe unapplied, but certainly not worth being updated to fit a morally ailing society.

I have had enough of this balderdash. Homosexuals and other extreme leftist groups who want their lifestyles to be made known to young men just don't seem to understand that their twisted perception of sexuality isn't what everyone in this country wants for their children. It's time more people start respecting themselves enough to hold firm to what they know to be true. I pray that the Scouts will win. I predict it eventually will.

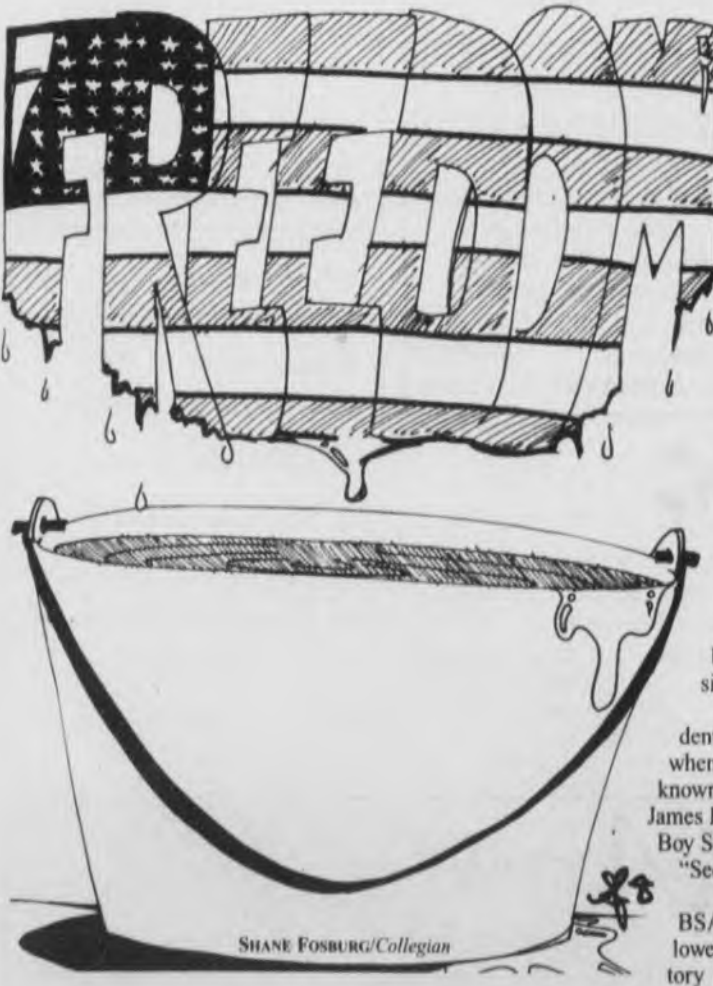

If it doesn't win, then I guess America will have lost yet another freedom. The freedom to choose what is right. The freedom to join with others to become a better, well-rounded, individual who stands for uprightness.

With help from the American Civil Liberties Union, gays are pushing their agenda like slick car salesmen. They are trying to feed our boys false messages about manhood, sex and an entire series of distorted views about life.

So far, the Scouts have remained firm in its decision to continue teaching young men excellence. Right now this freedom is being examined. If you think this doesn't affect you because you aren't a Scout, think again. It's just another drop in the bucket, and they all add up.

There are still a vast number of people who believe in right and wrong.

And when someone claims that wrong is right and expects to join with others who seek truth, I say, "See ya!"

SHANE FOSBURG/Collegian

KSU actually places 4 in Truman interviews

Editor,

I would like to thank the Collegian for its coverage of the news that three K-State students have been selected for Truman Scholarship interviews. In addition to these three, a fourth K-State Truman candidate, Julie Lea, senior in social work, has been offered an interview. She will interview April 6 in Denver, Colo.

The campuswide support these candidates receive from faculty, friends and organizations as they prepare their applications is essential to their candidacies. I would like to thank all of you for your help in preparing these students for the Truman Scholarship competition.

Cats' basketball team rekindles fans' pride

Editor,

I just wanted to voice my opinion, one that I believe many students would go along with, in response to Jess Louk's column on Page 6 of Thursday's Collegian.

Contrary to Louk's opinion, the Cats do have a season to be proud of. The same team that finished last in the Big 12 Conference last year came back and, after only adding a few players, managed an eighth-place finish this year. Also, let's not forget that going into the last day of the regular season the Cats could have finished anywhere between fifth and 10th. I'd say it's a great improvement over last year and something to be proud of.

Yes, I will grant that it would have been much sweeter to be in the NCAA Tournament instead of the NIT, but it is not a worthless tournament. It's a tournament that produces many great games and post-season experiences for the guys who haven't been there before.

Yes, K-State has had better seasons, and yes, it will have better seasons, but that doesn't change the fact that the men's team did what no one expected it to do. It went to the post-season and had a good season with many memorable moments. This university has another team of which to be proud. On behalf of myself and all the other fans who were there to watch all the great games in Bramlage Coliseum this season, thanks should go out to Aaron Swartzendruber, Marcus McCollough, Manny Dies, Ayome May, Ty Sims, Shawn Rhodes, Pero Vasiljevic, Josh Reid, Duane Davis, Chris Griffin, Adam Lopez, Joe Leonard, Jay Heidrick, David Ries and the coaching staff. Thanks for a great season.

Snyder, football team thankful for support

Editor,

We would like to give a belated thank you to all K-State football fans for once again displaying your loyalty, enthusiasm and support throughout the 1997 season. All of us involved in the football program have a deep appreciation for each of you. You have been there through the good and not so good, which epitomizes the true sense of loyalty.

The past nine years have been made possible through a great team effort, of which the fans have been a significant component. You have our sincere gratitude for being what we truly believe are the most prolific fans in college football today.

Gratefully yours,

Memorial for Quadri set for Saturday

JOHN STOUTS
Kansas State Collegian

A memorial for Dr. S. Kaleem Quadri, professor of anatomy and physiology in the College of Veterinary Medicine, has been set for 10 a.m. Saturday.

The service is to take place in All Faiths Chapel, said Don Fallon, director of religious activities at K-State.

Fallon will be ministering the service.

Quadri died of a heart attack Wednesday morning in his home.

Quadri was one of the most advanced researchers in the field of neuro-endocrinology and was a respected teacher at the college, where he had worked for 20 years.

"Dr. Quadri was a man of high integrity," said Greg Gallegos, first-year student in veterinary medicine. "He expected a lot from us, but he also gave us a lot. He challenged us to think. He was just an incredible instructor."

Funeral arrangements are being made through Edwards-Yorgensen-Meloan Funeral Home, which can be reached at 539-7481.

Weekend snowstorm causes confusion; leaves state employees uncertain of pay

TIM RICHARDSON
Kansas State Collegian

Betty Vine brought enough doughnuts and orange juice for everyone in the office Monday.

But there was no one in the office. A storm that dumped up to 15 inches of snow in parts of Kansas resulted in nonessential state employees receiving a day off. The time off was not extended to K-State employees.

Vine, president of Kansas Association of Public Employees in Topeka, a state employees union, said K-State employees who did not come to work Monday might have to take a day of annual leave, a situation Vine is uncomfortable with.

"I let it be known that we're not happy about it, and we want something done," she said.

A communication problem caused confusion among many employees. Vine said the policy used by former governor Joan Finney — that the university would be open and essential personnel must work — was used by Gov. Bill Graves.

The governor's office is reviewing employee's pay for Monday to decide whether they will receive pay or have to take a day off for annual leave.

"I wish I could say that everybody didn't have to take a day of annual leave, but I don't know," Vine said.

This confusion affected several parts of the state. Vine said Graves received several phone calls at home about problems with the weather conditions.

Many employees who went to their jobs were unable to work because of absent supervisors.

"It extends further than K-State," she said. "It involves people in their offices in Topeka and Lawrence, too."

Pat Dean, custodial supervisor for the Department of Housing and Dining, said it might be difficult for the university to function as normal if many employees are not at work.

SPORTS ROUNDUP

Sports Roundup is your daily dose of the latest scores, stats and news from the world of sports outside of K-State. Compiled from Associated Press reports.

Cats fall short in comeback attempt against Wichita State

Wichita — The K-State baseball team dropped a heartbreaker to the No. 15 Wichita State Shockers in Wichita on Thursday.

The Cats took the lead early when Yancy Ayres hit his second homer of the season. The two-run blast gave K-State a 2-0 lead going into the bottom of the second, but the Shockers promptly responded with seven unearned runs in the bottom half of the inning.

The Cats chipped away to get the lead down to one, but failed to get Scott Voos home after he pinch-hit for Jay Mastin, who singled with two outs.

Chris Traylor started, but lost his third game, falling to 1-3 on the year while only allowing one earned run.

Ayres led the hit barrage for K-State as he went 2-4 with three RBIs and two runs. Third baseman Josh Marn also added two hits and two RBIs giving him the team lead in hits and RBIs at 21 apiece.

Overall, the Cats fall to 6-9 on the year, and the Shockers move to 3-1 on the season.

NCAA TOURNAMENT

Spiders shocks South Carolina; Bear Cats escape Lumberjacks

Those NCAA Tournament spoilers from Richmond struck again Thursday.

This time, third-seeded South Carolina was the victim, falling to the 14th-seeded Spiders 62-61 in an East Regional opener in Washington, D.C.

Jarod Stevenson scored 24 points for Richmond, which sent South Carolina to its second-straight embarrassing opening-round loss. Last season, the Gamecocks lost as a No. 2 seed to 15th-seeded Coppin State.

Opening-round upsets have become almost routine for Richmond. In 1988, the Spiders, seeded 13th, knocked out fourth-seeded defending national champion Indiana. In 1991, as a 15th seed, they beat second-seeded Syracuse. And in 1984, they knocked out an Auburn team led by Charles Barkley.

"Every time we come into an arena, we just take the attitude that the team we're playing doesn't know we're good," Richmond forward Nick Patrick said.

While Richmond was stunning South Carolina, Cincinnati got all it could handle from Northern Arizona in the West Regional.

The second-seeded Bearcats trailed most of the game and avoided an upset on D'Juan Baker's three-pointer with 3.6 seconds left.

"This brought us back to reality," Baker said. "We can't take anyone for granted. It was a wake-up call today."

In the West Regional, West Virginia routed Temple 82-52, Maryland beat Utah State 82-68, Illinois defeated South Alabama 64-51, Utah beat San Francisco 85-68, and Illinois State edged Tennessee 82-81 in overtime.

Richmond won with defense, keeping South Carolina scoreless for the final 79 seconds and getting the upset when a driving shot and subsequent tap-in attempt by South Carolina's BJ McKie missed.

McKie scored 24 points for South Carolina (23-8), which hasn't won an NCAA first-round game in four tries since 1973.

South Carolina coach Eddie Fogler said he expected the press to write that the Gamecocks choked.

"I don't know. Maybe we did," he said.

In Thursday's late games in the East, Michigan State met Eastern Michigan and Connecticut played Fairfield Dickinson. In the West, it was Arizona vs. Nicholls State and Arkansas vs. Nebraska.

The Midwest and South regionals begin today.

North Carolina 88, Navy 52

At Hartford, Conn., the top-ranked Tar Heels (31-3) broke open the game with a 19-2 second-half run against the Midshipmen (19-11). All-American Antawn Jamison led North Carolina with 17 points and 14 rebounds.

It was the Tar Heels' first tournament game since 1959 without Dean Smith, who retired as coach before the season.

Washington 69, Xavier 68

At Washington, D.C., Deon Luten's 17-foot jumper with 11.2 seconds to play gave the Huskies their first NCAA victory since 1984.

Luten, who missed two free throws with Washington (19-9) leading 67-66 with 53.2 seconds left, hit his game-winner after Gary Lumpkin's two free throws had given Xavier (22-8) the lead with 42.5 remaining.

Indiana 94, Oklahoma 87

After blowing a 19-point, second-half lead, Indiana scored the first six points in overtime to win its first NCAA Tournament game in four years.

The win ended a string of three-straight first-round losses for Indiana and coach Bob Knight, who paid a $10,000 fine in order to coach the game. He had to pay the fine or take a one-game suspension as punishment for criticizing a referee after a Big Ten game last month.

Andrae Patterson scored 26 points for Indiana (20-11). Corey Brewer scored 22 for the Sooners (22-11), who have lost in the first round in their last five NCAA appearances.

West Virginia 82, Temple 52

The 10th-seeded Mountaineers (23-8) started with a 9-0 run and Temple never got close in a matchup of teams that were regular Atlantic 10 rivals before West Virginia moved to the Big East.

Jarrod West scored 15 for West Virginia and Brent Solheim added 13. Pepe Sanchez led the Owls (21-9) with 15 points.

► HOLLYWOOD NATIVE TO END ILLUSTRIOUS K-STATE CAREER AT NCAA CHAMPIONSHIPS.

Vanitta Kinard often dreams about strolling through Universal Studios, attending a Lakers game or shopping in a mall near her home in North Hollywood, Calif.

When Kinard comes back to earth, she remembers she is in Manhattan — where it can be both cold and monotonous at times for someone from North Hollywood.

"Sometimes when it's really cold, I ask, 'What the hell am I doing in Kansas?'" she said. "When it's cold and the wind blows, that's when I wish I was at home."

Then Kinard remembers why she is in Manhattan.

"There's not that much to do out here, but I guess I'm out here to study and get an education," she said. "All that fun stuff comes after you've graduated."

Kinard will graduate from K-State in May with a degree in sociology. However, before that time comes, she has to take care of another reason she came to K-State — to win a NCAA Track and Field Championships gold medal.

VANITTA KINARD, SENIOR IN SOCIOLOGY, IS THE FOURTH-RANKED COLLEGIATE TRIPLE JUMPER AND 17TH-RANKED COLLEGIATE LONG JUMPER IN THE NATION. KINARD WILL COMPETE IN THE NCAA INDOOR CHAMPIONSHIPS IN INDIANAPOLIS, IND., TODAY AND SATURDAY.

Kinard, who is the No. 4 collegiate triple jumper and No. 17 collegiate long jumper in the nation, will complete the final chapter of her illustrious track and field career for K-State today and Saturday in the NCAA Indoor Championships in Indianapolis, Ind.

In the 2 1/2 years Kinard has graced K-

State's triple-jump runway, the four-time All-American has amassed one outdoor and two indoor Big 12 triple-jump titles, one fourth-place NCAA finish and two third-place NCAA finishes in the triple jump. She placed 10th in the triple jump of the 1996 U.S. Olympic Trials and 14th in the 1997 World University Games.

Her personal best leap of 45 feet, 1 3/4 inches is tops on K-State's all-time triple-jump list by nearly two feet.

Kinard said her greatest achievement at K-State has been increasing her personal-best

Wildcats to take large contingent to NCAA Championships

Before this season, the K-State track team had never qualified as many as nine athletes for the NCAA Indoor Championships under Coach Cliff Rovelto.

Five men and four women will compete for the Wildcats at the NCAA Indoor Championships today and Saturday in Indianapolis, Ind.

"Collectively this is the most events we've had people go in," Rovelto said. "I think that's evidence that we have more national-caliber athletes than we've ever had."

The Wildcats will be well-represented in the men's high jump with three competitors. Charles Burney and Nathan Leeper both have leaps of 7 feet, 4 1/2 inches, the third highest collegiate jump of the season. Attila Zsivoczky is entering the meet ranked 10th with a jump of 7 feet, 3-3/4 inches.

"If they all jump what they've jumped to get there, all three of them could be in the top five,"

Rovelto said.

K-State will not have the only daunting trio of high jumpers in the competition. Arkansas also has three high-jump qualifiers, making it the first time two teams qualified three men in the high jump in one season. Only once prior to this season has a team successfully qualified three men in the high jump.

Burney said having Leeper and Zsivoczky competing with him could be an advantage.

"If I see something that they're doing wrong I'll tell them, or if they really get up, I'll tell them to do it again, and they do the same thing for me," Burney said. "It's like coaching while you're jumping."

The men's high jump is not the only event in which the Wildcats qualified multiple athletes.

Renetta Seiler and Anna Whitham will compete in the weight throw, and Keith Black and Randy Melbourne will run the 400-meter dash.

Seiler, who enters the meet ranked second, finished 14th in the NCAA Championships in 1996 and fifth in 1997. She said having Whitham with her in the NCAA Championships should help calm her nerves.

"I'm really excited about having another thrower going to nationals with me," Seiler said. "We'll get to warm up together, and that will calm us both down a little bit."

Seiler is one of the favorites to win the weight throw. She has dominated the event this season, having only lost to the nation's No. 1-ranked thrower.

"This meet I'm not going to have the luxury of not competing my best and still winning," Seiler said. "Every inch you get is going to count. You can never count on someone choking."

Rovelto expects the tandem of Black and Melbourne to score points for the Wildcats in the 400.

"Keith has got a little bit of a tight hamstring, but I think he'll be OK," Rovelto said. "So far, Randy has looked real good in practice." Black, who became an All-American in 1997 with a fifth-place finish in the 400 meters at the NCAA Championships, is ranked sixth in the event with a time of 46.23 seconds. Melbourne is entering the meet ranked 15th at 46.80 seconds.

Vanitta Kinard and Emily Diederich are the Wildcats' other NCAA qualifiers.

Kinard, a two-time Indoor All-American, qualified in both the triple jump and long jump. She enters the meet ranked fourth in the triple jump and 17th in the long jump.

Diederich, a junior, will make her first trip to the NCAA Championships in the 800-meter run. Her time of 2:07.18 is 11th in the nation. She said as the years have passed, she has developed a sense of urgency to qualify.

"Last year I wanted to go, but I didn't really have my heart set on it," Diederich said. "As you see your time coming to an end, there's a sense of urgency."

Bietau wishes for more push out of team against Red Raiders

DAN CATALDI
Kansas State Collegian

For the first half of the tennis season, Yana Dorodnova clearly has been the bright spot for the Wildcats. She has beat all opponents at No. 1 singles, with the exception of the No. 9 player in the country, Sandy Surephong of Texas.

Her 8-1 record includes several wins against nationally ranked players, including Monday's victory over BYU's Holly Parkinson, the No. 7 player in the nation.

Dorodnova is ranked No. 62 in the nation, but that ranking was established before her win over Parkinson.

For the remainder of the team, the season has not gone as smoothly.

"One of the goals is winning matches," K-State coach Steve Bietau said, "and you have to say that we haven't done that."

However, the team has played well against a tough schedule.

"We have had some chances, and we have been close against some good teams," Bietau said. "We have gradually played better."

Bietau said the team needs a change in attitude to close out the second half of the season. The team needs to reach another level to attain the team goal of qualifying for the NCAA.

"The team has just been a little too accepting of the status quo," Bietau said. "They must push themselves to another level. And it can't be one or two of them, it really has to be a majority of the group."

ONE OF THE GOALS IS WINNING MATCHES, AND YOU HAVE TO SAY THAT WE HAVEN'T DONE THAT.

STEVE BIETAU
K-State tennis coach

One thing that might help the Cats improve is the addition of freshman Martina Pospisilova from the Czech Republic. She would have played for the Cats earlier, but is joining the team midseason after problems at the SAT testing offices delayed her test scores from reaching the NCAA. After retaking the test and enrolling in classes that began meeting on March 1, she is now eligible to play.

Bietau likened this team to the group he had in 1996. It was at about the same level as this team, but raised its play a notch in the second half of the season to qualify for the NCAA.

That team used a win over Utah, followed by a trip to Las Vegas and wins over UNLV and Washington State, to build its confidence.

This team has a similar opportunity starting at 9:30 a.m. Saturday in Lubbock, Texas, when it meets the Texas Tech Red Raiders. After this meet, the Cats go back to Las Vegas to take on UNLV and Ohio State during spring break.

Texas Tech is a quality team the Cats could use as their springboard win to put them on track for an NCAA berth, Bietau said.

The Red Raiders have beaten several Big 12 opponents and return five players from last year's team that beat the Cats 5-4.

Also, their No. 1 player, freshman Zana Zlebnik, is undefeated so far this year.

The expected debut of Pospisilova could help the team make strides toward improvement. But, while Dorodnova has been steady all season for the Cats at No. 1, the remainder of the team needs to raise its level of play.

"It is becoming more and more important for other members of the team to step up," Bietau said. "We are asking each of our players to put themselves in the position of having the match on the line and having it fall on their shoulders."

Tennessee Volunteers on verge of lengthy dynasty in women's hoops

VIEWPOINT

DAN MERKER
Dan is a senior in computer science. You can send e-mail to Dan at dmerker@ksu.edu.

When the unanimous No. 1 team in the country, the Tennessee Lady Volunteers, takes the court tomorrow, it will be the first of a six-step program toward immortality.

If the Lady Vols don't cut down the nets at Kemper Arena on March 29, there will have been a monumental upset.

The two-time defending national champion Lady Vols are primed and ready to take on the world again and prove they are head and shoulders above the rest of the teams in college basketball.

Tennessee has won five national championships and reached 10 Final Fours since the NCAA Tournament started in 1982, and is one of only two teams that have reached every tournament. Tennessee has the winningest program in the history of women's basketball, with more than 70 more victories than No. 2 Louisiana Tech.

The scary thing is the Lady Vols keep getting better. Last year, it appeared they were beatable and would not defend their national championship from the 1995-96 season. They had 10 regular-season losses, quite a few for any team expected to contend legitimately for a championship, despite a killer schedule.

The 10-loss season was the most by Tennessee in more than 10 years, and the Lady Vols dropped out of the top 10 for the first time in 11 years. They were a No. 1 seed for nine straight years, but last year managed only a No. 3.

However, their championship character and experience brought them through, and they repeated as national champions with a 68-59 win over Old Dominion in the championship game.

This year, though, the Lady Vols have shown no signs of being the vulnerable team they were a year ago. They have obliterated everybody they have faced, and they have faced every team that would seemingly give them a challenge.

They beat Stanford, a fellow No. 1 seed in this year's tourney, by 18 on the road. They beat Connecticut, the No. 2 team in the country, 84-69. No. 3 Old Dominion lost by 24 to Tennessee.

DePaul beat a pretty good K-State team by seven at home. When the Blue Demons played the Lady Vols, also at DePaul, Tennessee won 125-46. The Lady Vols have let only two teams finish within 10 points this season. They're just scary-good.

This 33-0 team, as good as it is, loses just one player next year. She doesn't even start. Before long, they'll run away, leaving behind all other programs in the NCAA. They likely will win the championship this year and next. All-America forward Chamique Holdscrow doesn't graduate until after the 1998-99 season, which might bring them down a bit.

But by that time, they will have won four-straight national championships, and recruiting will be easier for Pat Summitt than it is to see a drunk in Aggieville. She will have the best players in the nation begging her for the opportunity to play at Tennessee.

Simply put, there is not nearly as much parody in women's basketball as there is in the men's game. When two teams step on the court, the outcome is usually a foregone conclusion. There is such a gap between the top-few teams and the rest of the crowd because the talent pool isn't as deep as the men's.

Because of this, when Tennessee continues to get the best players in the country, it will continue to be unstoppable. The Lady Vols are on the cusp of a dynasty that will put the Chicago Bulls' meager five championships to shame, and might even rival that of UCLA's men's basketball team in the '60s and '70s.

This team is a joy to watch, although its demolition reminds you how ugly a team can look when put against the best. It's as if you have a cute girlfriend who looks nice, until you see her next to Cindy Crawford. Suddenly she has never-before-seen flaws.

The Lady Vols will roll through this month's tournament with no problem, unless, like they do, you consider a 15-point win close. They are so good, it's entirely possible they won't lose another game until we see another leap year.

Variety of events planned for celebration

ALECIA TERRELL
Kansas State Collegian

Green will inundate Aggieville on Saturday as the business district plays host to a St. Patrick's Day parade, Fun Run and other holiday events.

This year is the 20th anniversary of the Fun Run, which is sponsored by Ballard's Sporting Goods and Kansas State Bank.

Aggieville Business Association Director Cheryl Sieben said the event usually falls during K-State's spring break. This year is different.

"This is a very special year for us," said Sieben, who is coordinating this weekend's activities. "In the past, St. Patrick's Day has fallen during the students' spring break, so the parade and Fun Run were more of a community event. This year, that isn't the case."

"We would really like to get the students involved," she said.

Sieben said an incentive for students to take part in the parade is a $100 gift certificate from Lucky Brewgrille. The prize is given for the wackiest, most original university entry.

Saturday's events start with Street Beat, a marching percussion ensemble, at 10:30 a.m. Street Beat is a group of about 35 people living within a 60-mile radius of Manhattan. The street performance begins at the corner of 12th and Moro streets.

Sieben said she hopes the turnout is an early one, so those who attend can see all of the events.

"We encourage people to come as early as possible," she said. "We have three coffee shops, all of the local restaurants, and there will also be food vendors selling funnel cakes and bratwurst."

The parade will begin after the street performance at about 11 a.m. in the 1100 block of Moro. Some of this year's entertainers include the Irish Dancers, Main Street Band and the Fabulous Marching Cougars.

"This is the most entertainment we have ever had," Sieben said.

She said there also will be activities for children during the day, including horse rides and a moonwalk.

"One event the kids like to do is the pot-of-gold competition," Sieben said. "They pay a quarter at the K-Rock booth and take their entry forms to all of the local businesses. In each business they have to find the poster that says 'pot of gold.'"

"The business owner gives their entry sheet a stamp, and when their

St. Patrick's Road Race

The following is a list of events that will be taking place in Aggieville Saturday in celebration of St. Patrick's Day.

9 a.m. Aggieville opens.
10 a.m.-1 p.m. Registration and securing of race packets for the walk and all races.
11 a.m. Parade with Fabulous Marching Cougars from Kansas City and the K-State Marching Band.
12:30 p.m. Start of men's and women's 2 mile Fun Run.
1:15 p.m. Start of St. Pat's 10K Road Race.

entire sheet is full they take it back to the booth for a raffle," she said.

The 20th-annual Fun Run will begin with the two-mile race at 12:30 p.m. At 1:15 p.m., the 10-kilometer road race and three-mile walk begin.

"Winners of the 10K get a $100 certificate from Ballard's and a $100 savings bond from Kansas State Bank," said Becky Ballard, manager and owner of Ballard's Sporting Goods.

Entry forms for the Fun Run can be picked up at Ballard's. The two- and three-mile races are $12, and the 10K run is $15. Registration for the races will be at 10 a.m. Saturday.

"We have a lot of good talent signed up already," Ballard said. "We also hope to get more students involved this year."

With the latest weather reports, many people are curious as to whether the parade will even take place.

Sieben said weather won't be a factor.

"It is going to happen, regardless," she said. "These runners are hard-core. I'm hoping for the best — possibly the temperature being in the 40's."

Outstanding debt could cause U.S. to lose vote in U.N.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — U.N. chief Kofi Annan cautioned Thursday that the United States could lose its voting rights in the U.N. General Assembly if an abortion dispute continues to hold up long-delinquent U.S. payments.

He pledged that "not a cent" of the money would be used to promote abortions.

Republican congressional leaders said they would press ahead to try to link abortion restrictions to money to pay the arrears, even as Democratic leaders predicted they could round up enough votes to sustain a veto threatened by President Clinton.

The long-simmering dispute also separately jeopardizes new funds for the International Monetary Fund to help ease the Asian financial crisis.

Annan, wrapping up a two-day visit, warned that the United States might have its General Assembly voting rights suspended if it soon doesn't pay a $600 million installment of back dues. The U.S. position in the Security Council, where it has veto power, would be unaffected. U.S. arrears are as high as $1.3 billion.

"I'm sure the U.S. government ... nor the people of America would want to be in a situation where the United States loses its vote in the U.N. because of lack of payment," Annan said in remarks at the National Press Club.

In his visit, the secretary-general talked to President Clinton and a group of lawmakers about separating dues from the congressional fight over abortion.

Clinton has said he will veto legislation sent to him that includes abortion restrictions — even if it delays the IMF money or the back payments to the United Nations. Democratic leaders in both chambers predicted Thursday they could assemble enough votes to sustain the veto. Legislation authorizing the back U.N. dues as well as keeping in place a variety of State Department programs and providing for a reorganization of the foreign-policy bureaucracy had been scheduled for a Thursday House vote.

Leaders postponed it until next week after a survey of Republican members showed divisions on how large the U.N. payments should be.

Leaders insisted, however, that solid support remained for the pro-life language.

"This should be a no-brainer for the president," said House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas. "Is he really going to sacrifice his United Nations policy to continue a proabortion campaign abroad?"

At issue is a measure — drafted by Republicans — that would bar U.S. funds from being used to support international family-planning groups that lobby foreign governments to liberalize their abortion laws. The provision has resulted in a legislative logjam over foreign-policy legislation since last fall.

Annan met Thursday with a group of lawmakers. Senate minority leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., one of those present, said the U.S. arrearage was a principal topic.

Annan was worried that "this doesn't help the chemistry in the United Nations, (that) this doesn't help relationships," Daschle told reporters. "It's very difficult for us to ask the United Nations to follow our leadership when we're not willing to pay our dues."

Tobacco company to pay 14 more states for sick smokers

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DURHAM, N.C. — The smallest of the biggest tobacco companies announced Thursday it had settled claims with another 14 states seeking reimbursement for the costs of treating sick smokers.

Brooke Group Ltd. and its Durham-based subsidiary, Liggett Group, said they now have reached deals with attorneys general of 40 states, accounting for more than 80 percent of the Medicaid claims against the cigarette maker.

Liggett, the smallest of the biggest tobacco companies, makes Eve, Lark, L&M and Chesterfield brands of cigarettes.

"Today's settlement is proof positive that the pressure we've put on the tobacco industry is bringing us closer to ... reimbursing the states for the billions of dollars in damages caused by the tobacco industry," said Ohio Attorney General Betty Montgomery on Thursday.

The Miami-based Brooke said the 14 new states will receive substantially the same terms that 26 other states received in earlier agreements. But Nebraska Attorney General Don Stenberg said the deal contains new guarantees.

The earlier agreements required Liggett to pay about 20 percent of its pre-tax income to the states for the next 25 years. The new deal requires the company to pay from 27.5 percent to 30 percent to the states in addition to the $1 million guarantees, amounts to be paid over 10 years.

Payments to the states are to be divided based upon their population of Medicaid recipients.

The company also promised it will no longer promote its products through outdoor advertising or market them on the Internet.

Liggett has acknowledged that cigarettes are addictive and cause disease. The company's market share has dropped to about 1.5 percent of ciga-

PAT PESCI, CENTER, EXPLAINS TABLE MANNERS TO MARC TANKING, SENIOR IN HORTICULTURE, AND REBECCA FRITZ, HOUSEMOTHER AT SIGMA KAPPA, AT THE FIRST UNIVERSITYWIDE DINING ETIQUETTE WORKSHOP THURSDAY NIGHT AT DERBY FOOD CENTER. THE WORKSHOP WAS CO-SPONSORED BY GREEK AFFAIRS AND CAREER AND EMPLOYMENT SERVICES.

WHICH FORK?

Dining etiquette workshop helps students avoid social mistakes

STORY BY SARA ZENGER • PHOTOS BY JEFF COOPER

Dinner interviews combine the stress of impressing a prospective employer with the potential embarrassment of a social mistake.

But students who attended the first universitywide dining etiquette workshop can now survive a dinner interview without worrying about which fork to use.

"We have two forks. We're working our way from the outside in," said Pat Pesci, workshop facilitator and instructor of hotel and restaurant management and institutional management.

This was one of the many etiquette tips more than 100 workshop participants received Thursday night at Derby Food Center. While sitting at candle-lit tables with piano music in the background, participants were talked through a formal dinner from salad to dessert.

The workshop was co-sponsored by Greek Affairs and Career and Employment Services. Michelle Bray, graduate assistant at Career and Employment Services, said the sponsors were trying to address another part of the interviewing process through the workshop.

"This is a hot topic. Most of the time the interviewee is asked to come to a site visit, and a meal is usually involved," Bray said. "This workshop provides basic dining etiquette, but it's above and beyond the things you're taught as a child."

Pesci said he hoped to build on the etiquette skills the participants already have.

"I try to get students to feel comfortable and have the basics down," Pesci said. "Nobody's going to run around and say, 'Gee, I need etiquette lessons.' But it doesn't hurt."

The workshop covered everything from basic table manners to recovering from mishaps.

"Notice the little tomatoes on the salad? Sometimes they fall to the floor," Pesci said. "If something falls to the floor, what do you do? Leave it. Probably no one at the table even noticed what you were doing."

Pasta was included on the menu, which brought up the issue of how to eat this sometimes-difficult food.

"Do what you do best. I'm not telling you to learn to twirl when you're a cutter. You're already stressed when you're at an interview. If you're a cutter, I don't want you to learn a new method," Pesci said.

Pesci also addressed situations that prospective employees should watch for during dinner interviews.

"When the recruiter asks what you'd like to drink, ask what they would recommend. If they say wine, then the door's open for you to order wine or beer," Pesci said.

Pesci did say there is a limit on how many drinks an interviewee should have.

"How many drinks are you going to have? One. I don't care if I'm over here getting sloshed — have just one," Pesci said.

Many of the students participating in the workshop said they were hoping to gain an edge in the interviewing process.

"The job market can be dog-eat-dog. I want to have any advantage that I could have when it comes to the interview process," Jacques Leonard, graduate student in music, said.

However, Renee Fisher, senior in public relations, said she was surprised how simple many of the formal dining etiquette rules were.

"I was surprised how much of it is common sense. It's not so much being formal but using good decision-making skills," Fisher said.

PASTA WAS SERVED AS AN ENTREE AT THE WORKSHOP, BRINGING UP THE ISSUE OF HOW TO HANDLE THIS TRICKY FOOD. "DO WHAT YOU DO BEST. I'M NOT TELLING YOU TO LEARN TO TWIRL WHEN YOU'RE A CUTTER," PAT PESCI, WORKSHOP FACILITATOR, SAID.

A MURAL ON THE WALL OF EAST STADIUM LEADS THE WAY TO THE ENTRANCE OF THE PURPLE MASQUE THEATRE.
IVAN KOZAR
Collegian

Purple Masque changes as times change

DIANE LEE
Kansas State Collegian

The Purple Masque Theatre, in East Stadium, has been a center of student theatrical work on campus for a number of years, but it has other origins.

"The space was used as a cafeteria when East Stadium was used as a residence hall for athletes, probably football players," Lew Shelton, associate professor of theater, said.

The area was turned over to the theater department in the mid-'60s, around the time the old auditorium burned down.

"This space became the main performance area after the old auditorium burned down and served in that capacity until McCain Auditorium was completed," Shelton said.

Although McCain was available to house productions, the Purple Masque was still the favored theater at the time.

"When I came here in 1973, the theater program was only presenting the musical production in McCain, while the rest of them were done in the Purple Masque," Shelton said.

Shelton said having a diversity of space arrangements was the main motivation for choosing to operate in this situation.

"The Purple Masque is a flexible theater space. This means the seats can be removed and placed in different arrangements to fit the type of production being done. It was part of a movement known as black-box experimental theater, which was very exciting at the time," he said.

While this continued for some time, time constraints eventually forced a change of plan.

"We began to realize that it took us several days to change the configuration of the space which was very labor- and time-intensive. In the '74-'75 academic year we created a permanent stage and seating configuration," Shelton said.

At this time, the space was no longer used for the same purpose, but instead became a home for student-directed works and served as a studio space.

Today, in addition to the occasional large production, Purple Masque is home to Lunchbag Theatre, the work of Shelton's acting and directing workshop. This class gives students hands-on theater experience by giving them the opportunity to act in and direct one-act plays.

It is also home to other student directing efforts, such as "The Southerland" by Charles Smith, directed by Donna Davenport, junior in theatre.

"It is a much smaller space so it is a more intimate setting, but it also makes it more important to pay attention to small things. The audience is so close that it is harder to hide details," Davenport said.

She said it works well for pieces such as the one she has chosen to direct.

"It is a thrust theater, so the audience sits on three sides instead of just in front of the stage. No matter where you are sitting in the audience you get a different view of what is going on," Davenport said.

The theater has been used for a number of years in a number of ways, but has been kept up to date.

"It has been upgraded over the years. In the early '80s the rotting wood floor was taken out since it was a little unpredictable. It was replaced with concrete and carpet," Shelton said.

He said the space is equipped with an updated computerized light board. The theater was also recarpeted two years ago to repair damage caused by flooding in the East Stadium.

While the part the space plays has continually changed, it now has a permanent role in campus theater.

"People really like performances in there, because they are intimate and the audience members are close to the actors. It is normally a good experience for anyone who comes," Shelton said.

Ghost of athlete roaming theater

When actors rehearse in Purple Masque Theatre, they might have an unseen audience.

According to popular legend, when the building was used as residence halls for athletes, a tragedy happened that still haunts the space.

Nick, a football player, was injured during a game and waited in the space that now serves as the theater dressing rooms for his parents to arrive.

They never made it. His parents were killed in a car accident on their way to his game, and Nick allegedly died waiting for them to show up. Many people say his ghost still waits there for his parents' return.

Donna Davenport, junior in theater, said Nick is roaming the theater.

"We rehearsed in the theater the other night until 10 o'clock, and some of the little noises in the theater set some of us on edge. He has been really active lately. More than one person has seen him in the past week or so," Davenport said.

MARCH MOVIE MADNESS

Brave the cold, get out to see new spring releases

CHRIS DEAN
Kansas State Collegian

If fear of being trapped in Newton, Kan., for a second weekend has you staying in town, and fear of the cold has you staying indoors, this might be the perfect weekend to catch up on the flurry of recently released movies.

To protect you from spending $5 on another worthless flop, I have put together a quick review from various sources of the movies playing in Manhattan.

Movie Review

Campus Theatre:

"Blues Brothers 2000" Rated PG-13

This movie flew through theaters so fast, most people probably missed it. A thankless remake of the first one, it might not have any surprises, but it has good music and good laughs. In other words — it's worth $1.

Seth Childs 6 Theatres:

"Hush" Rated PG-13

The plot is forced, and the acting's bad. Jessica Lange steals the show as a psycho southern belle, but as the only redeeming factor, it's just not enough.

"Krippendorf's Tribe" Rated PG-13

Television's newest sensation, Dharma of "Dharma and Greg," makes her film debut with Richard Dreyfus in this comedy of Cultural Anthropology 101 gone bad. The plot might be weak, but it is enough for a laugh.

"Kissing A Fool" Rated R

When Friend A wants to prove the loyalty of Girl B, he asks Friend C to seduce her. Think of a heterosexual "Chasing Amy" without the same comic genius. It's a clever rehash of the same old movie and good for a laugh, but make this one choice B.

"Man in the Iron Mask" Rated PG-13

Another Three Musketeers, this time relying on Leonardo DiCaprio to make a little money off the often-abused story. Jeremy Irons, John Malkovich, Gerard Depardieu and Gabriel Byrne round out the cast.

"Twilight" Rated R

Paul Newman, Susan Sarandon and Gene Hackman join forces in this movie, created by the same team that did "Nobody's Fool." The slightly aged mystery drama is sometimes slow and predictable, but with this cast, they would have to work extremely hard to fail.

"Titanic" Rated PG-13

Assuming it's safe to say everyone in America has already seen it, spend your money elsewhere. If you haven't seen it, this instant American classic is a must-see before it sweeps the Academy Awards in two weeks. Just be prepared to fight the mass of 3rd- and 4th-grade girls who are keeping it in theaters.

"U.S. Marshals" Rated PG-13

Tommy Lee Jones reprises his coolest role this decade as U.S. Marshal Sam Gerard. The plot and action are essentially the same as "The Fugitive," but it was good the first time, and it will be good again.

Westloop 6 Theatres:

"As Good As It Gets" Rated PG-13

All three main stars are nominated for Oscars and deservedly so. "As Good As It Gets" is as un-PC as they come, but some of the best comedies are.

"Caught Up" Rated R

Hailed as the first real loser of 1998, "Caught Up" is a film noir black comedy. Snoop Doggy Dogg and LL Cool J make guest appearances, but that's about all you will hear of this movie. If you want to see it, see it this week. Word is, it doesn't stay in any theater too long.

"Dark City" Rated R

Excellent special effects and a chilling plot make for one of the better psycho dramas this year, but be prepared. This one requires a little thought and concentration.

"Good Will Hunting" Rated R

Nominated for Best Picture among other Oscars, this romantic drama starring Matt Damon, Ben Affleck and Robin Williams is worth all the Oscars it will surely win. It is the best date movie in theaters today.

"The Wedding Singer" Rated PG-13

Now that we've lived long enough to see a period piece about the '80s, it's time to go, sing along, be embarrassed by the clothes we once wore and feel really old. "The Wedding Singer" is Adam Sandler at his comic best, and even Drew Barrymore puts on a good show.

"The Wings of the Dove" Rated R

This movie's claim to fame is lead star Helena Bonham Carter's Oscar nomination for Best Actress. See this, and you can have the distinct honor of being the only person at the Oscar party who saw the film when they announce her name.

K-State Student Union:

"Mad City" Rated PG-13

John Travolta and Dustin Hoffman square off in a film about the mental insanity of museum security guards and the evil manipulation of journalists. Slow and essentially actionless, it's a good movie for an inexpensive date when you don't plan to watch the screen.

"Pillow Book" Not rated

Ewan McGregor, pre-"Trainspotting," stars in this romantic and erotic film of art and fetishes. No, guys, the Union is not showing stag films, but those who have an aversion to erotica should beware. Nudity abounds.

"Casablanca" Not rated

An American-classic must see. You know the rest.

Agency to issue directive on bathroom breaks

ASSOCIATED PRESS

An Iowa teacher brings her entire class to the bathroom with her when she needs to go and can't find a substitute. A North Carolina meat packer had to wait so long for permission to go that she soiled herself.

For most people, using the toilet at work hardly causes trouble; they just get up and go.

But for teachers, factory workers, telemarketers, farm workers and others, meeting this simple need can mean humiliating pleas for permission and even a risk of losing their jobs. Some avoid drinking liquids or try to hold it in all day — habits that court medical problems.

Federal law requires employers to have enough bathrooms. It doesn't say anything about allowing workers to actually use them.

That will change this spring, when the Occupational Safety and Health Administration will issue its first explicit directive requiring bathroom access.

"When I first heard about this problem, I was horrified to learn that employers can get away with this," said Marc Linder, who teaches at the University of Iowa's College of Law and co-wrote "Void Where Prohibited," a book on the issue, published in January.

"This isn't a problem in every workplace, but it's much more widespread than we had originally believed," he said.

In part because of Linder's research, in January Iowa became only the second state to explicitly protect workers' rights in this area. Minnesota enacted a law in 1988.

Daisy Brock was humiliated last year while cleaning chitlins — pig intestines — at the Smithfield Foods hog processing plant in Tar Heel, N.C.

Brock, suffering from a stomach ache, said she asked repeatedly for permission to go to the bathroom because company rules require workers in Brock's department to wait for a replacement before going. No replacement was found, Brock said, and she went to the bathroom in her clothes.

"I couldn't hold it until I got to the bathroom," said Brock, who was fired last summer after she stayed home a week with pneumonia. "If you say you had to leave the line, they said they'd fire you."

Joann Graham, a worker at the same plant, said the problem varies by department. In her current job, she can go at will. But in her last job hanging newly slaughtered pigs on hooks, "You had to talk noise to go."

Asked about bathroom access at the plant, Smithfield spokesman Arron Trub said he didn't know anything about the issue.

Food processing — especially poultry — factories have the worst record on bathroom access, according to OSHA officials and unions.

"Every time I work on a campaign in the poultry industry, this is the No. 1 issue," said spokesman Greg Denier of the 1.4-million-member Food and Commercial Workers union.

"It goes to human dignity."

OSHA's first citation against an employer for denying workers access to bathrooms came last July against a Hudson Foods poultry plant in Noel, Mo.

A spokesman for Tyson Foods, which now owns Hudson, insisted that workers were being allowed proper access.

"But if they're abusing that freedom, by example going outside and smoking, then they're subject to discipline," said Tyson spokesman Ed Nicholson. "That has happened."

Texas professor credits shelter for giving him 'sense of family'

KELLY REDDING

Kansas State Collegian

A journalist and poet said he couldn't have survived without the people at Hull-House, which served as more than a shelter for him.

"It was not just a place. It was a spirit and a symbol. The doors were never locked. People will fight and die for a sense of family and home," said Gene Burd, assistant professor of journalism at the University of Texas at Austin.

Burd was a resident of Hull-House, which is in Chicago, during the 1960s. He had moved to Chicago to try and break into the daily newspaper scene.

While there, he had various duties, some of which included answering referrals and handling the switchboard.

"It was a place to merge your private ambitions with your career," Burd said.

In his presentation titled, "The Evolution of Hull-House: The Legacy of Jane Addams," Burd said Hull-House, which was started by Jane Addams in the late 1800s, was originally an old mansion built by Charles Hull in a poor immigrant area of Chicago. From there it eventually grew into a complex that covered 150 acres of land.

Burd said Hull-House not only served as a home to those who were there, but also offered schooling, art, music and a cafeteria.

"Its halls and walls spoke to me," Burd said.

Addams didn't want the house just to be a shelter, Burd said.

"She saw the settlement as a university," he said. "This is where you could learn life by living. She said you were supposed to do things with people, not for them."

Burd also said many different people had been through Hull-House.

"The guest list looked like a who's who in great American society. There were visitors, lecturers and students," he said.

Some of them included Carl Sandburg and Benny Goodman. President Theodore Roosevelt also visited.

One of the most famous residents of Hull-House was Jesse Binford, who spent 60 years living there, Burd said. She was known as the "Conscience of Chicago."

Eventually and after much confusion, it was decided that the University of Illinois would be built on the 150 acres that Hull-House possessed, Burd said.

Today, all that remains is the old mansion, now a museum, and a small building that was used as the dining hall.

Speaker disputes findings of study linking Bell Curve to success in life

BRENNIA TALLEY

Kansas State Collegian

In the first University Distinguished Lecture Series sponsored by the Department of Statistics, Kathryn Roeder examined whether genes alone determine success in life.

Her speech, "Intelligence and Success: Is it all in the Genes?" assessed the soundness of inferences in the book "The Bell Curve: Intelligence and Class Structure in American Life" by Richard Herrnstein and Charles Murray.

Roeder said she has strong disagreements with conclusions Herrnstein and Murray made, and she said they had misconstrued many facts by sweeping aside studies that did not support their view.

"The Bell Curve's arguments can be summarized by this syllogism — genes determine IQ, IQ determines life success, and therefore, genes determine life success," Roeder said. "They say we'll become more stratified based on our cognitive ability and interventions will not help, because IQ is based on inheritance."

Roeder said the summary of their book is depressing and offered some statistical and environmental factors to counter their arguments.

Roeder said a maternal or "womb" effect proves intelligence is multifaceted — it's not determined by just one factor.

"Most brain hardware develops in the womb, and 70 percent of its mass develops by age one," Roeder said.

Adding that it's already well-known that nutrition, smoking and drinking affects a baby in the womb, she said her maternal-effects model fits best in explaining why identical twins' heritability is so highly connected, even when separated at birth — they were in the womb together.

Roeder closed her speech touching on the cognitive caste system "The Bell Curve" predicted.

"Cognitive elites are regressing to the mean. It's the luck of the draw, environment and interactions of genes, but children are not inheriting luck," Roeder said.

At the end of her lecture, Roeder offered a different conclusion for "The Bell Curve."

"Genes only influence IQ because environment is important. IQ only influences life success because education matters more. And genes only influence life success because much is left to the environment and chance," Roeder said.

"The future promises to be better than what was promised by 'The Bell Curve.'"

Manhattan social worker receives acclaim from national organization

KELLY REDDING

Kansas State Collegian

Tamara Hawk, a clinical social worker in Manhattan, has been selected as the Social Worker of the Year by the Kansas National Association of Social Workers.

"I guess that I'm honored," said Hawk, a 1975 graduate of K-State.

After graduating from K-State with a degree in home economics and community service, Hawk went to Georgetown University to do her post-graduate work in family therapy. She has worked for four years at the Menninger Clinic in Topeka.

Hawk's long list of accomplishments includes being the past president of the Kansas National Association of Social Workers. She also has chaired the Child Welfare Committee and worked with children's rights lawsuits against the state to improve the rights and services of children.

Hawk found out she was receiving the award two weeks ago.

"They look for people who have showed leadership and advocacy of clients," she said.

"People nominate you and write letters of support."

"This award is about being able to bring connections into social services."

Hawk will receive the award today at a presentation at the KNASW conference in the K-State Student Union.

Brenda Hanger, licensed specialist clinical social worker in Manhattan, said Hawk was the first person to get her involved in KNASW.

"She took me to a conference just like this 10 years ago," Hanger said. "She introduced me as a volunteer to the Committee on Women's Issues, and I've been on it ever since."

Hanger said Hawk was a good candidate for the award.

"The unique thing about Tamara is that she is willing to do the work herself. She stays there with you, and that's critical to the growth of an organization," Hanger said.

Three ways to beat the high cost of college.

1. The Montgomery GI Bill
2. Student loan repayment
3. Part-time income

The Army Reserve Alteration Training Program is a smart way to pay for college. First, if you qualify, the Montgomery GI Bill can provide you with up to $7,124 for current college expenses or approved vocational training. Second, if you have—or obtain—a qualified student loan not in default, you may get it paid off at the rate of 15% per year or $500, whichever is greater, up to a maximum of $10,000. Selected military skills can double that maximum. Third, you can earn part-time money in college, and here's how it works: One summer you take Basic Training, and the next summer you receive skill training at an Army school. You'll earn over $1,500 for Basic and even more for skill training. Then you'll attend monthly meetings at an Army Reserve unit near your college, usually one weekend a month, plus two weeks a year. You'll be paid over $107 a weekend to start. It's worth thinking about. Give us a call.

TCl expands Univision's hours

to find a solution to the Univision situation by expanding Univision programming on the weekends," Benson said.

HALO members said they are pleased to have Univision now, but they still believe the network, the fifth most popular in America, deserves a 24-hour slot.

"We've come a long way from nothing to part-time, but Univision is definitely deserving of a prime-time slot," HALO President Leo Prieto said.

Carlos Contreras, public relations officer of HALO, said he agreed.

"I think also in such a short time it's already proven it deserves to be shown 24 hours," he said.

Prieto said viewers miss news broadcasts and prime-time shows they would like to see. He said there will be other shows in the future that viewers will want to see, including soccer programs.

"I know that when the World Cup shows, Univision will be showing a lot of games during the day," he said. "A lot of people have already shown interest in it."

Cofer said TCl would like to show Univision for 24 hours every day, but right now that isn't possible. He said there isn't enough channel space available.

"I would say for the immediate future there really isn't an opportunity to expand," he said. "We've done our best with the channel capacity we have now in trying to satisfy the people who want Univision and the ones that want Knowledge TV."

"We've gotten numerous thank-yous for carrying it. We know it's a compromise," Cofer said.

"We know there are a number of people who want it for 24 hours, but there are still people who want Knowledge TV."

Cofer said if there are opportunities in the future, TCl will look at Univision again to see if they can show it for 24 hours.

Prieto said HALO will continue to promote Univision.

"For Open House, we're working on bringing Univision here to do a cover story on us," Prieto said. "because as far as petitions and letters are concerned, we've already proven that there is a need and use for it."

Benson said there is still a chance K-State will have 24-hour Univision by fall 1998.

Telecommunications cable administrator Jerry Marrow said they were scheduled to start taking bids for an on-campus cable provider on Thursday.

He said depending on the cost of building the system, Univision could be available for 24 hours.

Although it's pushing for 24-hour Univision, HALO members said they are still excited about the limited Univision available. Prieto said he and other students are taping programs at night so they can watch it later.

"It gives me chills when I hear Spanish on TV," he said.

triple jump by more than three feet in only two years.

However, K-State track coach Cliff Rovelto said her growth has not been limited to the track.

"I think she's grown tremendously not just in track, but as a person," Rovelto said. "I think she's been successful in becoming a good person, and that's one of the reasons why we're going to miss her so much."

Kinard has not decided where she will go or what kind of job she will have after graduation.

"I liked Atlanta when I went down there for the Olympic Trials, but I may stay here to train for the Olympics," she said.

Kinard said she someday wants a job involving coaching, counseling or something that has to do with people.

State snow day not extended to K-State workers

"They know the professors can't come to work if other people can't come to work," she said.

Vine said universities generally stay open despite large amounts of snow because there are students to teach. With students ready to learn, employees are there to do other jobs, such as cleaning sidewalks.

She said that on days when not all employees are at work and cannot fulfill their jobs, students need to be especially careful in potentially dangerous situations, such as icy and snowy conditions.

"They've got to take some responsibility to take care of themselves," Vine said.

Natalie Brockish, president of the local KAPE chapter, said many employees who were absent Monday will be given the opportunity to make up the missed day on Saturday.

"I don't want to risk my life and limb to get out in this type of weather," she said.

Brockish, who has worked at K-State for nearly 30 years, said a snowstorm in 1971 and an ice storm in the '80s were comparable to Monday's snow — neither of which were sufficient to cancel classes.

"I am dedicated to being there, but Monday morning it would have been hard to just maneuver my car," she said.

Brockish received nearly 70 phone calls Tuesday afternoon from employees about the weather conditions.

She said she felt sorry for students who had to attend class in the cold weather and others who were stranded because of closed highways.

"I think it stinks. I really felt like this doesn't happen very often," she said. "They had to walk in what I would consider blizzardlike conditions."

Investigation looks into possible campaign violations

ANGELA KISTNER
Kansas State Collegian

Greg Davis and Jim Boomer hope they don't lose their shirts in Wednesday's student body presidential runoff election against Tracey Mann and Andy Macklin.

Engineering Sen. Carlton Getz, who compiled the Student Governing Association elections regulations, filed two grievances against the candidates last week.

Getz said he was concerned with the screen-printing cost the candidates reported for their T-shirts. Getz said he also had heard that Davis and Boomer gave their shirts away for free — a possible campaign violation.

"I was forwarded an e-mail from the Davis and Boomer campaign that seemed to indicate they would be distributing their shirts for free," Getz said. "I was asked to look into it to make sure it was not a violation."

Getz wouldn't say who asked him to investigate.

Davis said there was a simple answer to the grievances.

SGA '98 Elections

"We followed the exact regulations, and it is OK if family, faculty or friends are able to raise enough money to buy the shirts," he said.

Student Body President Tim Riemann, also a member of the Elections Committee, investigated the grievance. Riemann would not comment about the investigation.

Elections Committee Chair Ryan Kerschen said the committee found that Davis and Boomer's fathers bought the T-shirts, so they did not have to be claimed as a campaign expense.

Under election regulations, articles of clothing don't have to be counted as an expense if they are bought by supporters. Printing costs must be claimed, however.

Kerschen said the election code doesn't say supporters have to be K-State students. Those who disagree with that decision can file an appeal to the committee's decision, he said.

"If you disagree with our decision, you go to the next chain of commands, which is Student Tribunal," he said. "We make a decision on our own interpretation of the election codes. Getz has a right to disagree."

Getz said he does disagree with the committee's decision and has appealed it. He said the intent of the T-shirt regulations is that shirts be printed by candidates and then resold to individual student supporters.

"Individual supporters would buy individual shirts rather than one person buying the entire thing," he said. "I appealed to tribunal to seriously look into it."

Getz said he wants tribunal to clarify the difference between a supporter and a contributor. He said it is not defined in the election regulations.

"We'll have to take care of that pretty soon," he said.

Student Tribunal Chancellor Kelly Dickson would not comment on the grievance hearing scheduled for Thursday.

'SMASH HITS AND POP FLIES'

DAN KWONG PERFORMED "SMASH HITS AND POP FLIES" IN THE UNION LITTLE THEATRE FRIDAY NIGHT. "ODE TO CENTERFIELD" WAS ONE OF THE EXCERPTS FROM THE SHOW.

Dan Kwong said he never was interested in becoming an actor as a child.

"I always wanted to be a center fielder for the Dodgers," said Kwong, a performance artist from Los Angeles who performed "Smash Hits and Pop Flies" on Friday.

A small crowd filed into the Union Little Theatre to watch Kwong as he combined humor, Asian history and art into his performance. The performance was part of K-State's observance of Asian-American Awareness Month.

Part of Kwong's performance, "Ode to Centerfield," described his feelings from the perspective of a baseball player.

His "Song for Grandpa" described how Kwong made fun of his grandfather, an odd man who would sing the words from an encyclopedia for his grandchildren's amusement. Now that his grandfather is dead, Kwong said he realized he was a great man who found comfort within himself.

"I always try to do something meaningful and fun on stage," Kwong said. "If the story is true and well-written, there's always something real or of substance, which makes the piece fun to perform each time."

Much of Kwong's solo work, which is written, created and performed by him, uses personal stories to address various issues of identity regarding his Chinese-Japanese-American background.

Kwong has toured since 1989 and has performed all across the United States and in London and Mexico City.

"I've never performed in Asia," he said. "My structure is very sentence-heavy, and I would probably have to talk very slowly to be understood."

Kwong performed a medley of excerpts from several different pieces of work. The pieces he performed made the audience chuckle because they struck a familiar chord.

"He was very dramatic, entertaining and funny," Jana Franz, senior in marketing, said. "I liked the way he shared experiences that related to how people in society treat Asian-Americans."

Kwong said he didn't use as many props in Friday's performance as he does in Los Angeles. The crowd only saw a small part of the complete performance.

Week planned to teach facts of agriculture

AMY EBERT
Kansas State Collegian

Agriculture is a $7 billion industry in Kansas. The No. 1 state industry will be celebrated as part of National Agriculture Week.

Kansas Secretary of Agriculture Allie Devine said National Agriculture Week is both for rural and urban residents to learn more about the industry.

"National Ag Week is celebrated to remind people where their food comes from, and also to honor the farmers and ranchers that make the industry successful," she said.

Devine said there are two main events being coordinated by her office. The first event is the Ag Pizza Day in Kansas City, Mo. Elementary students are invited to walk through booths and displays that explain the processes of meat, cheese and bread production.

"We essentially build a pizza for them by explaining all the areas of production. That shows them where their food comes from," she said.

The second event is the Governor's Agriculture Conference on Friday in Wichita. The conference will feature U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Dan Glickman; Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan.; and Gov. Bill Graves.

Devine said the conference is open to the public, and the event begins at 9 a.m. Friday at the Hyatt Regency Hotel in Wichita.

K-State is also taking part in the celebration of National Agriculture Week with a lecture at 3:30 p.m. Thursday in Williams Auditorium, Umberger 105.

Two student organizations, National Agri-Marketing Association and Agricultural Communicators of Tomorrow, are sponsoring the George Stephens Memorial Lecture.

Dan Manternach, president of the Professional Farmers of America, will address the future of agriculture into the 21st century in his "Seven Megatrends in Agriculture" lecture.

Kris Boone, assistant professor of agricultural journalism and adviser to Agricultural Communicators of Tomorrow, said students should attend Manternach's lecture to learn more about the industry's future.

"The number one reason students should attend is that it's always important to identify trends in the industry you are going to work in," Boone said.

Orlen Grunewald, professor of agricultural economics and NAMA adviser, said he thinks Manternach's perspective on the future is important, too.

"I think the important aspect of the lecture is the visionary part where he'll talk about the future of agriculture and its impact on the economy," he said.

Boone said all students should attend the speech because of agriculture's influence on the job market.

"It's important to realize that we have and will continue to have a deficit of graduates in agriculture, so for students outside the College of Agriculture, it will be good for them to learn more about agriculture."

STATE CHAMPIONSHIPS COME TO MANHATTAN

Hill City, Moundridge come away with 2A basketball titles

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
Kansas State Collegian

At least 12,000 basketball fans visited Manhattan last Wednesday through Saturday for a seat in Bramlage Coliseum.

The class 2A state high school basketball tournament brought small-town basketball teams, their supporters and their money to Manhattan, said Donna Logback, assistant tournament director and tourism sales manager for the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce.

Logback said attendance was fairly normal for the tournament, which has been in Manhattan since 1990.

"It went really well," she said. "Our numbers were pretty steady. It was down slightly from last year because of the snow, but overall, things were good."

The event featured girls' and boys' teams from 16 Kansas high schools. Four games were played each day through Saturday.

Logback said more than 200 volunteers, plus many other paid staff members, were needed to make the tournament a success. Good teams and close games also helped, she said.

"We had some really good, close games, and that made it very enjoyable for everyone who was there."

Buck Shilts, Moundridge, sat in the stands Saturday and watched a game that wasn't so close. His daughter Annie and the Moundridge girls' squad beat Sedgwick High School, 94-33, for the championship.

Shilts said the team had a good tournament following for a team from a town of only 1,500.

"I don't know who would be left in Moundridge right now," he said. "It's a good half of the town, plus uncles and aunts from everywhere."

Shilts said many Moundridge parents and fans didn't stay the whole week in Manhattan. In the small community, not many can afford to leave work for basketball.

"A lot of these people are people who work for a living," he said. "There aren't a lot of really wealthy people here, so most of them drive back and forth and just stay Friday night."

"There's a work ethic there, and it shows on the floor, too."

Jim and Nancy Rausch, whose son Steve played for the Garden Plain Owls, watched their team take home

Manhattan water, sewer billing system could be more efficient after updates

A new billing system might allow the city of Manhattan to include more information on utility bills and could help students get bills faster when they move.

"Basically, what it's doing is allowing us to break down the bill a little more," said Judith Crosby, customer service supervisor for Manhattan.

Water and sewer bills will use the new system. The bills will be broken down to include more information than could be put on the old postcard bills. The new system will also include space for special announcements and inserts.

The new bills will use larger paper and require envelopes. This will increase postage costs from 18 cents to 23.9 cents, Bryan Kidney, assistant director of finance, said.

However, the city will make up the difference through more efficient sorting and by lowering the cost of other mailings. The city expects to save as much as it invested in equipment in labor and postage costs, Crosby said.

In terms of work hours, the city will save a full-time position that would have been used for sorting bills. These hours will be used for other duties.

Also, several city mailings can use the new system to generate addresses, which will save the city money in other programs.

Kidney said the city spent more than $55,000 on new equipment for an automated sorting system.

The system also will decrease the number of bills returned with incorrect addresses through special address-correcting software.

The new bills will include space for messages about direct-deposit programs and special city events or programs that used to require a separate mailing. Water and sewer bills will also have more detailed information about the charges.

Computer software with the new equipment also will help the city get the correct addresses for forwarding bills to students who move.

"We're actually going to send it to the student instead of it being sent back to us," Kidney said. MATT KREPS/Collegian

NATIONAL NEWS

FBI investigate allegations that CIA agent encouraged Hussein assassination attempt

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The FBI investigated allegations that a CIA agent involved in covert operations in Iraq encouraged an assassination attempt against Saddam Hussein, Newsweek said in its editions on newsstands today.

No evidence of illegal activity was found, and the agent was later decorated by the CIA for his work in Iraq, the magazine said.

The agent, code-named Bob, informed CIA headquarters of a plan by an Iraqi resistance group to ambush the Iraqi president's convoy on a vulnerable stretch of road and kill him, the report said.

Bob was ordered to discourage the resistance fighters from even attempting the ambush, it said. It was not clear if the ambush ever took place.

The CIA is prohibited by U.S. law from plotting to assassinate foreign leaders.

The report said Bob also was involved in the failed 1996 attempt by the Iraqi National Congress, a coalition of anti-Hussein groups, to foment an uprising. Other Iraqi dissidents refused to join the National Congress, and Iraqi tanks moved into northern Iraq in August 1996 to end the resistance and destroy the CIA operation in the region.

Anthony Lake, then the White House national security adviser, learned at the last minute of the planned National Congress attacks and sent Bob a cable telling him to inform the rebels their plan had been compromised and risked failure.

But the resistance group's chief, Ahmed Chalabi, said Bob insisted the message was not negative because it did not expressly forbid military action, the magazine reported.

It said Iraqi resistance leaders also said Bob promised that U.S. warplanes would hit Hussein's tanks if they moved north against them. Bob told his superiors he made no such promise.

Missouri may allow reprieve for prisoners on death row who donate kidneys, marrow

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — Milton V. Griffin, scheduled to be executed March 25 for choking, beating and fatally stabbing a man in 1986, said he would gladly swap a kidney or some bone marrow to save his neck.

"I can never make up for the crime that I committed," Griffin, 37, said from his southeastern Missouri prison cell. But with an organ donation — in exchange for sparing his life — "I can give back to the community."

Such a transaction isn't legal, but it would be allowed under a controversial proposal in the Missouri Legislature.

On the same day Griffin is to die by lethal injection, a House committee is to consider a bill allowing condemned inmates to donate bone marrow or a kidney in exchange for having their sentence changed to life in prison without parole.

For fast relief from the nagging ache of taxes, we recommend TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs are tax-deferred annuities that can help you build additional assets—money that can make the difference between living and living well in retirement.

Contributions to SRAs are conveniently deducted from your salary on a pretax basis. The result? More money invested. Fewer taxes now. And since investment earnings are tax deferred until you receive them as income, the money you don't send to Washington can work even harder for you.

What else do SRAs offer? A full range of investment choices, a helpful loan feature, and the financial expertise of TIAA-CREF, the world's largest retirement system.*

Professor honored for his influence on lives of others

► SERVICE REMEMBERS DECEASED K-STATE PROFESSOR DESCRIBED AS GOOD FATHER, TEACHER, FRIEND.

COLLEGIAN STAFF

The service for a K-State veterinary medicine professor who died last week began with verses from the Koran to remind those in attendance of their own mortality.

Dr. S. Kaleem Quadri was a professor of anatomy and physiology and head of the endocrinology department in the College of Veterinary Medicine. Quadri died of a heart attack in his home Wednesday. His body will be taken to his native India later this week.

The Koran verses read by Dr. Syed Ameenuddin, research associate in biology, at All Faiths Chapel on Saturday spoke of the "greater reality" of life, which is death. Every person's life on Earth is temporary, and death is a passing into to a new plane of existence, he said.

"If we realize this, we can recognize everyone's death as our own," Ameenuddin said.

That theme was reflected by Dr. Hrish Minocha, associate dean of research for the veterinary college, who sang a few stanzas of an Urdu love song that he said Quadri especially liked.

Translated, the stanzas went, "This home is not forever in this world. We come into this home, and finally, we go away from here."

Talat Rahman, professor of physics, said Urdu is a language created in the 16th century in India by the Moghuls. She read a couplet in Urdu in memory of Quadri.

"Asma iss lehad par shabnum afshani karey," she read. "Ek sabzaye naurasta iss ghar ki nageh bani karey."

Roughly translated, these phrases mean, "May the heavens shower dew on this body, and may there be a new green vine that protects those he left behind."

In attendance was Quadri's wife, Sandy, and his 14-year-old daughter, Rana, an eighth-grader at Susan B. Anthony Middle School. Also in attendance were other members of Quadri's family, including his sister and nephew who had traveled from India for the service, colleagues and students at K-State and several friends.

Quadri was a cheerful man who loved poetry and history and valued honesty above all else, said Dr. Jane Westfall, professor of anatomy and physiology. She said he was very proud of his daughter, who plays first-chair flute in her school band and also plays basketball. Members of the Anthony girl's basketball team were seated in the back row of the chapel.

Jerry Weis, associate professor of biology, said he was fortunate to have known Quadri for 6 1/2 years. He described Quadri as courageous and willing to ask the necessary hard questions.

"He also loved good coffee — and

NEIL V. ANDERSON, INTERIM DEAN OF THE COLLEGE OF VETERINARY MEDICINE, SPEAKS TO THE LARGE GATHERING OF PEOPLE IN ALL FAITHS CHAPEL ON SATURDAY MORNING AS PART OF THE MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR DR. S. KALEEM QUADRI. QUADRI, PROFESSOR OF ANATOMY AND PHYSIOLOGY IN THE COLLEGE OF VETERINARY MEDICINE, DIED OF A HEART ATTACK WEDNESDAY.

I'm going to miss sharing those cups of coffee with him," he said.

Michael Nawrocki, sophomore in veterinary medicine, said he had Quadri as an instructor of endocrinology, and said he had never met an instructor so careful to be sure that all who attended his lectures left better than they came in. "He had a parable for us," Nawrocki said. "If I had two loaves of bread, I would sell one to buy a flower to feed my soul. That's how I want to remember him, as a beautiful flower blooming inside me. I'll always have that memory."

Tippi Megid, junior in veterinary medicine, said she remembered a Valentine's Day when a student brought Quadri a carnation. Quadri was at a loss for words, a rare occasion.

"That's how I want to remember him, choked up by a flower," she said.

Quadri would always tell his students, "Think and enjoy, and don't be late," Megid said. "Dr. Quadri had future students that will now be void of his influence."

The service was moderated by Neil V. Anderson, interim dean of the veterinary college. Anderson said Quadri would refer to the veterinary college in a possessive way — as in, "This is my college."

"I miss you, friend Kaleem," he said. "May you rest in God's peace, in your homeland."

Aggieville's community spirit should influence rebuilding

On Feb. 14, a piece of Manhattan was destroyed.

But when four businesses in the Aggieville district burned to the ground in the early-morning hours little more than a month ago, community spirit wasn't lost.

This was evident Saturday, when thousands flocked to Aggieville for a St. Patrick's Day celebration that included a parade, Fun Run and other entertainment.

Rubble still sits in the empty lots on Moro Street, but Manhattan residents and K-State students ignored the absence of one of the district's most historic buildings. Children stood cheering and scrambling for candy as the parade traveled past the fence that protects the property.

It was a sad sight. A piece of Aggieville was missing Saturday. But the spirit of those at the St. Patrick's events made up for the missing buildings — and it made the case for constructing a building that doesn't detract from the area.

As students and residents stood together through Saturday's events, Aggieville's community spirit was more evident than ever. A bar district by night, Aggieville is more than a college hangout. Its lively reputation as a business district was evident.

But property and business owners shouldn't let commercialism invade their plans to rebuild.

As Saturday's activities proved, Aggieville is above that.

Yes, the business district is booming, but whatever appears on Moro shouldn't be a one-story, prefabricated attempt at replacing the historic structure that once loomed over the street.

Open a bar. Open a laundromat. Open whatever. But build a structure that keeps students and city residents coming to a district where memories are made.

Aggieville is the center of a university community that ranks far above others. That ranking, and the feelings that accompany it, should not be destroyed.

Those who participated in elections should be commended, but true leaders are those students who get involved simply because they want to

Make a change

VIEWPOINT

SANTOS RAMIREZ
Santos is a senior in criminal justice. You can send e-mail to Santos at lpdline@ksu.edu.

Time has come and gone, and another campus election has passed everyone by — literally. Those who participated in the elections should be commended. Their hard work and ability to balance academics and a campus leadership position, plus find a way to pay for college, is more than for what candidates are ever credited.

I have heard much animosity on campus the last two weeks about the elections being nothing short of a popularity contest. Because of this stigmatization, the greek community has also been blamed for holding so many positions within the Student Governing Association.

Even though the greek community has many Student Senate positions, the general student body should not blame it for filling these positions that are open to everyone.

The blame should fall on students who did not care or bother to get involved.

Students use the excuse of average grades to stay uninvolved. This is a bad reason, because more than half of the learning experiences throughout college tend to come from outside the classroom.

Stepping up to fill leadership positions or serving on committees for the general student body might carry more weight on a résumé than a high grade point average but little, if any, campus involvement.

Being involved in a leadership position can be time consuming, though many students choose not to get involved for other reasons.

I find it irritating that a large number of students had the nerve to sit back and criticize all the candidates as merely being part of one big clique. They have also said that campaigning was nothing more than a popularity contest.

Leadership needs to start with the general student body, and no group should be singled out for doing more than its share.

It is sad that a small fraction of the student body voted. Low voter turnout means a small group of interested students actually determine leadership.

One solution might be to fill certain positions within SGA from each individual college. It was sad to see some students in certain colleges win seats with only a small number of votes.

It is estimated that less than 3,500 students voted. I don't want to take away anything from those students who won a seat for their college or in Senate, but what does voter turnout say about our overall image as a campus?

Perhaps the low voter turnout and animosity about election winners should serve as a wake-up call to everyone. If you don't like the way things are run but chose not to get involved, then maybe you should think twice before you complain about SGA being a big clique. If you are upset because things are not getting done by students who were elected, then get involved. Voting is a privilege on this campus that students apparently take for granted.

Candidates who made the decision to get involved are the true leaders of this campus because they made the initiative to get involved and hope to make a change. Whether they won or lost, the experience will surely help them in the long run.

All candidates should be seen as winners, and no one group should be singled out for taking more of an initiative than others. I applaud everyone who ran for any leadership position this campus election.

Lack of tolerance makes former Boy Scout bitter

KEVIN JACOBS
Kansas State Collegian guest columnist

Sam Sackett's column on Friday was the most inflammatory piece of extremist right-wing propaganda I have seen in the Collegian in a long time. He accuses those homosexuals who are valiantly fighting to stay involved in something as important as Scouting of being extreme leftists, trying to undermine America's youth.

Get real, Sackett. Do you really think a left-wing, radical, extremist homosexual would bother with an organization as middle-America as the Boy Scouts of America? Yeah, right. The Queer Nation boys are far too busy overthrowing patriarchy to bother with joining the Boy Scouts. The Scouts and leaders who are grappling with the bigotry within the Scouts are pretty damn middle-of-the-road, conservatives even.

Those gay Scouts and Scoutmasters recognize the importance of the values that Boy Scouts teaches, and the character the Boy Scouts instills in young men. They want to preserve that legacy for themselves and their sons. These men aren't left-wing extremists, they're moderates who want to make sure the Boy Scouts lives up to its own high moral standards in regards to how it's treating its homosexual and atheist members. Unfortunately, the Boy Scouts isn't succeeding in doing so right now. Those Scouts are doing the right thing for Scouts to do when faced with an injustice — they are trying to change it.

Unlike Sackett, I can say this with some authority, because I was a Scout. I spent many loyal years in Scouting: Cub Scouts, Webelos, Boy Scouts. I earned many merit badges, served as a den assistant for Cubs when I was a Webelo and made it as far as Second Class before my family moved away. And incidentally, I am gay.

What's more, I knew I was gay the whole time I was in Scouts, and I never believed that it was in conflict with my oath.

Don't you think that is ironic? Boy scouting invested a lot in me, and I invested a lot in Boy scouting. I was instilled with the character that Boy scouting seeks to instill. And now, as an adult, because of who I am, Boy scouting spits in my face. Now, Boy scouting teaches young men that I am not to be trusted around them, and that I am twisted, evil and a pervert. So much for loyalty. Am I bitter? Hell, yes. Everything that Boy scouting taught me ended up being just a lot of hot air.

I think the Boy Scouts was a much more tolerant, accepting organization, back in the '70s and '80s when I was a Scout. But in the past few years, right-wing religious extremists with a Christo-centric agenda have taken over scouting, seeking to purge anything that doesn't fit in their narrow world view.

Young gay men, who could use the guidance and the male role models that Scouting provides are being denied that opportunity. Young straight men are being denied the opportunity to work with talented adult gay role models. Former Boy scouts who wish to return to Scouting what it had given to them are being cast out right and left in a McCarthyesque witch hunt that makes the U.S. Army look positively welcoming in comparison.

Something has gone terribly wrong in Boy scouting when good, decent, moral people have to fight in the courts to stay involved. Sackett calls homosexuals twisted. But it is the Boy Scouts of America that has become truly twisted.

At least there's some room for hope: the Girl Scouts still admits lesbians and atheists. The right-wing extremists haven't taken them over.

Bare-bones schedule doesn't leave room for class cancellation

Editor,

I strongly suspect the decision to keep K-State open for classes in the face of extremely adverse weather has less to do with the proximity of the students than with the extremely tight scheduling to comply with minimal instructional hour requirements. There is simply no way to make up instructional time that is lost if the university is closed.

The bare-bones scheduling is quite obvious in both semesters. Spring semester begins on a Thursday, with two days of classes, then the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday the following Monday. This is a very awkward teaching schedule, because Tuesday-Thursday sections will meet one full week before Monday-Wednesday sections have their first class session.

In fall semester, instructors are not permitted to cancel classes on the Monday and Tuesday prior to the Thanksgiving holiday, even though nearly two-thirds of the students choose to be absent, creating an awkward teaching situation for the instructor.

The addition of just three days to each semester could eliminate this awkward scheduling and build in the flexibility to deal with adverse weather. If spring semester began on a Monday instead of Thursday, all classes would begin with a regular schedule, and there would be extra days over minimum requirements in case of adverse weather.

If fall semester could begin one full week earlier, the two days of Thanksgiving week could be omitted — as they are by the majority of the students anyway. This would still leave extra days for weather emergencies or even for the inclusion of the fall break under consideration, although this may not be necessary with a full week of Thanksgiving break.

Closing the university under adverse weather conditions not only protects the health and safety of the students and employees, it allows emergency personnel to do their work of storm recovery more efficiently and with greater personal safety.

And in the event that Kansas does not present us with a weather emergency in some semester, will anyone be hurt by having two or three days of academic experience beyond the required minimum?

Columnist's opinion based in bigotry against homosexuals

Editor,

I am saddened, though not surprised, by the latest example of Sam Sackett's dogmatism, bigotry and intolerance. His latest column showcases his homophobic attitudes regarding the exclusion of bisexuals, gays and lesbians as members or leaders of the Boy Scouts of America.

His statement that the Boy Scouts is "upholding values that have led to America's success" is particularly ironic given the general view that the founder of the Boy Scouts, Robert Baden-Powell, was gay.

The myriad successes and worthy goals of the Boy Scouts have nothing to do with the sexual orientation of its membership. My heterosexual orientation certainly didn't aid me in developing a sense of courtesy, commitment, loyalty or kindness any more than someone's homosexuality would impede them from developing such qualities.

As a youth in the Boy Scouts, I was unaware of the fact that the Boy Scouts discriminates on the basis of sexual orientation and religious beliefs. I was content with learning to tie sheep-shank knots and playing with my Scout-issued snake bite kit that I never did get to use.

At age 10, however, I got a healthy introduction to the type of hate and bigotry that Sackett espouses. The mother of a friend I attended Scouts with for several years was barred from participating in scouting events with her son because she was a lesbian. The Boy Scouts policy requires that gay parents be excluded from such activities. A nice lesson in family values, huh?

Rather than constructively highlighting the current pending legislation regarding sexual orientation and related religious issues surrounding the Boy Scouts, Sackett chose to fill his column with such derisive phrases as "homosexuals and other extreme leftist groups," "their twisted perception of sexuality," "pushing their agenda like slick car salesmen" and "trying to feed our boys false messages about manhood, sex and an entire series of distorted views about life." His views would be almost laughable if I didn't know they were heartfelt.

Whether Boy Scouts is subject to various state civil rights statutes forbidding discrimination based on sexual orientation is a debate being played out in various jurisdictions across the nation. The debate rests on the legal question of whether the Boy Scouts is an organization of public accommodation or a business. The individual rulings have been convoluted, and, perhaps, little will be settled until the matter ultimately is heard by the Supreme Court.

The Boy Scout's discriminatory policy is, no doubt, partially based on ignorance, stereotypes and the false myths that homosexual scouts will influence youths to change their sexual orientation and will pose a predatory threat to molest young boys. Can you say, homophobic?

There is broad scientific consensus that sexual orientation is most likely set early in life, prior to age six. With regard to homosexuals molesting children, predatory sexual behavior and pedophilia are overwhelmingly characteristics of males who are heterosexual and insecure in their own sexual identities.

At a time when our campus, our nation, our world and our lives are increasingly fractured by discrimination, bigotry and intolerance, turning a deaf ear or a blind eye to the Sam Sacketts of the world who advocate hate and discrimination in the guise of Christian values is no longer tolerable.

As human beings, we should acknowledge that discrimination against gays, bisexuals and lesbians is every bit as wrong as discrimination against someone because of their race, creed, color, national origin, ancestry, age or marital status.

Parade, road races lure students, citizens to Aggieville for St. Patrick's celebration

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
Kansas State Collegian

Thousands braved the cold wind Saturday for an Aggieville-style celebration of Irish luck.

The district's annual St. Patrick's Day celebration included a morning parade, 2-mile run, 3-mile walk and 10-kilometer road race.

Aggieville Business Association Director Cheryl Sieben, who organized the event, said everything went well considering the cold temperatures.

"A lot of it depends on the weather. There were a lot more people than I thought would be there because of the cold," she said. "The streets were packed."

Sieben said 50 entries were planned for the parade, which was started in 1982, but more were added Saturday morning.

"We had additions to the parade that we weren't even expecting, and that's always good," she said.

Saturday's festivities also included the 20th-annual St. Patrick's Day Road Race. Race Director Harvard Townsend, a Computer and Network Services employee, said turnout was good for the competitions as well.

"We've had over 1,000 historically, but in the last four years I've been a part of it, this is the most we've had," Townsend said.

More than 760 people participated in the day's race events, with 348 running the 10K road race. Only 630 participated last year.

Townsend said cold weather also made the race turnout surprising.

"The weather was cold and our pre-race entries were pretty normal, but the number of people who registered Saturday before the race was up 120 over last year," Townsend said.

Annette Duncan, a 1995 K-State alumnus from Olsburg, Kan., said she came back for the 20th anniversary.

"I ran the race when I was in school," she said. "Last year I didn't run, but I decided to come back and do it again this time. It's the 20th anniversary, so I figured, 'What the heck?'"

Townsend said Jim Ryun, U.S. congressman from Kansas' 2nd District, also ran in the race and participated in the awards ceremony. Ryun, a three-time Olympian, added to the day, he said.

"It was real neat to have Jim Ryun run," Townsend said. "He actually ran the 10K and then handed out several awards afterward. That was neat."

Bill Franz, a Manhattan resident in his second year at the race, said he wouldn't quite match Ryun's performance. Franz placed second-to-last in his age group last year, and said he wanted to improve his time.

"This year I trained during the winter for this. Last year, I took the winter off, but I felt really bad finishing as low as I did," he said.

Sieben said participants like Franz were the focus of the St. Patrick's Day events when they started, 20 years ago. The celebration was traditionally during spring break, which gave merchants a chance to lure other customers to the business district.

"Twenty years ago, it was started during spring break as a way to get the community out and get them to Aggieville," Sieben said. "We've been trying for the last couple of years to get the word out to students."

Sieben said more students took part in the events this year than normal, which is a welcome improvement.

"We've been trying to get the word out to students that we have a great time in Aggieville and they should, too," she said.

NCAA men's hoops Tournament Valparaiso 83, Florida State 77, OT

OKLAHOMA CITY — Only Hoosiers might know Valparaiso is in Indiana. Now everyone is sure where the Crusaders are headed — to the round of 16.

Valparaiso took another big step in its surprise run by beating Florida State 83-77 on Sunday, sending the smallest school in the NCAA tournament to its first regional semifinal.

Bob Jenkins and Antanas Viliuskas made follow shots in the final two minutes of overtime as Valparaiso won its 13th straight game. The Crusaders (23-9) will play Rhode Island in St. Louis next Friday.

Bryce Drew, the hero of a 70-69 first-round upset of Mississippi, scored 22 points and made two free throws to ice it with 8.3 seconds left. But follow shots by Jenkins with 1:31 left, and another by Viliuskas with 25.3 seconds remaining, knocked out the Seminoles, a No. 12 seed and the final at-large team selected for the tournament.

Duke 79, Oklahoma State 73

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Four years after Duke's run of final 16 appearances ended, the Blue Devils are in position to start another.

Roshown McLeod scored 22 points and had 10 rebounds Sunday as top-seeded Duke made the big baskets and its free throws to beat Oklahoma State 79-73 in the second round of the South Regional.

The Blue Devils (31-3) are back in the NCAA Tournament's final 16 for the first time since 1994, when they completed a run of eight such appearances in nine years.

Duke advances to St. Petersburg, where it will face Syracuse on Friday.

Syracuse 56, New Mexico 46

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Etan Thomas scored six points during a 15-6 run in the second half that carried Syracuse to a 56-46 victory Sunday over cold-shooting New Mexico in the second round of the NCAA Tournament.

Syracuse (26-8), the fifth seed, will play top-seeded Duke in the South Regional's third round at St. Petersburg, Fla., on Friday.

Duke defeated Oklahoma State 79-73 in Sunday's other second-round game in Rupp Arena.

Fourth-seeded New Mexico (24-8) had difficulty penetrating Syracuse's 2-3 zone defense, shooting a season-low 26 percent (14-of-55), including six-of-25 from three-point range.

Kentucky 88, St. Louis 61

ATLANTA — For the first time in four years, the Kentucky Wildcats aren't a No. 1 seed in the NCAA tournament. It looks like they're taking it personally.

Second-seeded Kentucky extended its month of domination with another double-
Saint Louis 88-61 in the second round of the South Regional.

The Wildcats (31-4) scored the first 10 points of the game, then destroyed the Billikens (22-11) with a five-minute rampage. After Saint Louis cut the deficit to 19-11 on Ryan Luechtefeld's baseline jumper,
Kentucky reeled off the next 19 points.

UCLA 85, Michigan 82

ATLANTA — Written off before they even got here, UCLA's seniors aren't finished quite yet.

Coming off the worst game of his career, senior Kris Johnson sank eight straight free throws during the final 37 seconds Sunday to help the sixth-seeded Bruins (24-8) defeat Michigan with an 85-82 win in the second round of the South Regional.

The game between marquee programs lived up to its billing, a run-and-gun affair with three-pointers launching, crossover dribbles and tomahawk dunks.

It also had an exciting finish, as Michigan (25-9) cut a late eight-point deficit to two on three occasions in the final 30 seconds, only to see Johnson hit his free throws down the stretch.

It erased memories of his three-point effort in Friday's first-round win over Miami and helped himself and fellow seniors Toby Bailey and J.R. Henderson advance to the round of 16 for the third time in their careers.

Purdue 80, Detroit 65

CHICAGO — Opening tip. Game over.
Once again, it was Purdue early — and decisively.

For the second consecutive game,
Purdue took a large lead and was never caught.

The Boilermakers, the second seed in the Midwest, defeated Detroit 80-65 Sunday and advanced past the second round of the NCAA Tournament for only the third time in Coach Gene Keady's 18 seasons.

Chad Austin scored 20 points and Brad Miller 18 for Purdue (28-7), which will meet third-seeded Stanford (28-4) in Friday's regional semifinals at St. Louis.
The Cardinal beat Western Michigan 83-65 on Sunday.

Stanford 83, W. Michigan 65

CHICAGO — Stanford's size and a game-winning technical foul that became a seven-point possession helped the Cardinal win a trip back to the NCAA Tournament's round of 16.

Arthur Lee scored 24 points and Stanford had a 41-25 rebounding edge
Sunday to overcome Western Michigan's quickness and beat the Broncos 83-65 in the Midwest Regional.

Tim Young, the Cardinal's 7-foot-1 center, scored 19 points and had 13 rebounds and forward Mike Madsen added 19 points and 10 rebounds as Stanford (28-4) matched the school record for most victories in a season.

Stanford, the No. 3 seed in the Midwest Region, will now play Purdue on Friday in St. Louis.

► KU LOSSES IN TOURNEY, FALLING TO RHODE ISLAND IN 2ND ROUND.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

OKLAHOMA CITY — Roy
Williams and his two All-Americans will be watching this year's Final Four, not playing in it.

Top-seeded Kansas got outstanding performances from Paul Pierce and Raef LaFrentz, but didn't have the quickness to stay with No. 8 seed Rhode Island, which won 80-75 Sunday to advance to the Midwest Regional semifinals.

The early exit was another bitter loss for Williams, who hasn't coached a Final Four team since 1993. His Jayhawks were top-ranked when they lost to Arizona in the regional semis last year. This team was ranked No. 2.

"I'm not sure how this one ranks (compared with the Arizona loss)," a red-eyed Williams said afterward. "But I told the kids in the locker room I was sorry if I caused them a problem by talking about my desire to win a national title.

"If it put extra pressure on them, then I apologize."

Rhode Island (24-8), led by guards
Cuttino Mobley and Tyson Wheeler, was every bit as relaxed in advancing to just the second regional semifinal in school history.

Point guard Wheeler had 20 points, eight assists and five rebounds. Mobley had 27 points and five assists. Wheeler had five three-pointers; Mobley had three.

The Rams advance to play surprising
13th-seed Valparaiso, which beat
Florida State 83-77 earlier in the day.

Rhode Island coach Jim Harrick, who led UCLA to the national title in 1995 but was fired after the following season, is in his first year with the Rams.

Harrick is good friends with Valparaiso coach Homer Drew. He's even better friends with one of Drew's assistants — Jim Harrick Jr.

"There is a heavenly father and he was in the building this weekend. I'll tell you that," Harrick said, "because it couldn't be more magical than it was."

Pierce had 23 points, and LaFrentz scored 22 and grabbed 14 rebounds. But they didn't get enough help. Billy Thomas was two-of-15, including two-of-13 from three-point range, and the Jayhawks shot just 43 percent.

RHODE ISLAND 80, KANSAS 75 RHODE ISLAND (24-8)

King 2-3 0-0 4, Reynolds-Dean 3-6 1-2 7,
Clay 6-9 2-5 14, Mobley 10-19 4-5 27,
Wheeler 6-13 3-3 20, Arigbabu 1-2 0-0 2,
Murphy 2-8 2-2 6. Totals 30-60 12-17 80.

KANSAS (35-4)

Robertson 3-9 0-0 9, Thomas 2-15 2-2 8,
Pugh 1-4 0-0 2, Pierce 9-19 5-8 23, LaFrentz
11-17 0-1 22, Earl 4-7 0-0 8, Gregory 0-0 0-0
0, Bradford 1-1 1-2 3, McGrath 0-0 0-0 0, Chenoweth 0-1 0-0 0. Totals 31-73 8-13 75.

Halftime — Kansas 30, Rhode Island 28.
3-Point goals — Rhode Island 8-22 (Wheeler
5-10, Mobley 3-10, King 0-1, Murphy 0-1), Kansas 5-28 (Robertson 3-8, Thomas 2-13, Pierce 0-7). Fouled out — None. Rebounds —
Rhode Island 39 (Clay 11), Kansas 41
(LaFrentz 14). Assists — Rhode Island 15
(Wheeler 8), Kansas 16 (Pierce, Robertson
5). Total fouls — Rhode Island 16, Kansas
18. A — 13,369.

Meanwhile, Rhode Island shot 50 percent, something the previous 25
Kansas opponents had failed to do.

"I think you've got to give credit to Rhode Island for making a lot of big shots and keeping their poise," Kansas forward T.J. Pugh said. "I don't think it was a question of us losing our poise at all."

The Jayhawks simply couldn't stop

Mobley and Wheeler. Whether they were slicing past man-to-man pressure or shooting three-pointers over the Kansas zone, the tandem was too much.

"When we play as well together as we did tonight, it's very difficult for opponents to hold us," Mobley said.
"I'm not trying to be high on ourselves, but that's the advantage we have, to out-quick people."

The loss ended a streak of five straight regional semifinal appearances for Kansas, which finishes 35-4.

"It's been a fantastic year with a lot of fantastic moments," Williams said.
"This is not one of them. But I feel very, very fortunate and very, very lucky to have been their coach."

LaFrentz had a double-double by halftime, with 10 points and 10 rebounds, but Kansas only led 30-28 because of the play of Rhode Island's guards. Mobley had nine points at the break, Preston Murphy came off the bench to score five and Wheeler had four assists.

Thomas had returned to the lineup and played well in a first-round blowout of Prairie View A&M. But he missed his first eight shots before making a three-pointer that gave Kansas a 39-32 lead with 17 minutes left in the game.

Rhode Island came right back and the left-handed Wheeler tied the score at 45 with a three-pointer. Mobley hit from long range on the next trip, then Antonio Reynolds-Dean converted a three-point play to give the Rams a 51-45 lead with 12:29 to play.

Two more baskets by Mobley and consecutive three-pointers by Wheeler helped give the Rams their biggest lead, 65-55, with 8:24 remaining.

Pierce scored three points and assisted on a basket in a 7-0 run that brought the Jayhawks within 65-62 before Mobley gave Rhode Island some room with a three-pointer from the top of the key with 5:11 to play. Kansas then tried four straight three-pointers and missed them all, and as a result got no closer than four the rest of the way.

"There were times when we took bad shots, but a few of those were good shots," Pierce said. "We got shots with Billy wide open and Ryan (Robertson) wide open. Those are shots we count on."

Kansas finished five-of-28 from three-point range, and only outrebounded the Rams by two.

"We understand we've got to move on," Williams said. "We've got to go on and life continues."

JEFF COOPER/Collegian

SCOTT VOOS, K-STATE SHORTSTOP, DIVES BACK TO FIRST BASE DURING PLAY AGAINST AIR FORCE AT BUTLER COMMUNITY COLLEGE IN EL DORADO, KAN. THE CATS BEAT THE FALCONS 14-6.

Wildcats steal 2 of 3 weekend games against Air Force Academy

JEREMY KELLEY
Kansas State Collegian

The K-State baseball team finally came across weather sufficient enough to play in on Friday and Saturday and took advantage of it, dusting the Air Force Falcons in two of three games.

The Cats were forced to move the games to El Dorado because of inclement weather in Manhattan.
Games were played at Butler County Community College over the weekend.

On Friday, K-State trounced the Falcons in a doubleheader, 14-6 and 5-

4. On Saturday, the two teams squared off in a seven-inning game. The Cats lost 6-4.

Five of K-State's previous six games were canceled because of the weather.
The Cats were scheduled to play just a single with the Falcons on Friday, but added another for good measure.

"The weather was just so nice, and we hadn't played in a while so we decided to just keep going," center fielder
Eric Sommerhauser said.

The Cats fell behind early when Air Force lead-off man Mike Thiessen hit the first pitch of the game out of the yard off starting pitcher Brandon Peck.

However, K-State responded with seven runs and never again trailed in the contest.

The Cats pounded out 13 hits, including two home runs, both in the eighth inning, sealing the victory for K-
State. Third baseman Josh Marn smashed his team-leading fifth homer of the season and also added two more RBIs for the year, upping his ante to 23 on the season — a mark that also leads the squad.

Second baseman Chad Tabor also hit a homer — his second in three games.

Catcher and first baseman Chet Savage went two-for-four and tallied four RBIs and a run scored.

"We played really well on Friday," Sommerhauser said. "We hit the ball really well, and I think we had a great weekend."

Peck threw eight innings, allowing 10 hits along the way, and picked up his third victory of the season.

In the second game of the doubleheader the Cats got down early but stormed back.

Third baseman Mark English hit the game-winning home run to seal the 5-4 victory for K-State. Closer Andy Silva came on to earn the win.

"We got down early and came back," Sommerhauser said. "We put up a four spot and were able to put up some runs and then Mark hit one out to clinch it."

With the wins, K-State moved to 8-10 on the year.

As of Sunday, players said K-State's doubleheader scheduled today against Howard has been canceled because of field conditions at Frank Myers Field.
The Cats will be back in action this weekend at Myers Field in a three-game

2nd-round loss represents end of dream season for Jayhawks, Williams

The Passing Moment came at about 6:15 p.m.
Central Standard Time in Oklahoma City's Myriad Convention Center.

Rhode Island head coach Jim Harrick offered a solid handshake. Kansas head coach Roy Williams offered a few words of congratulations. Harrick gave Williams a soft, solemn pat on the back. Williams gave Harrick a look of disbelief.

A clash of emotions balled up in the pit of the two coaches' stomachs.
Harrick rushed his players like he'd won the world.
Williams stumbled amid the mob like a wide-eyed New York City tourist who had lost his wallet.

The Passing Moment happens to coaches almost daily this time of year. It's the coaches' traditional meeting in front of the scorer's table following these kind of games.

One hopes the night never ends. One wishes he'd never rolled out of bed.

But this is where the story gets good.

Where, if you rapidly flip pages of "War and Peace," it looks like a Tom and Jerry cartoon.

Where, if you look deep into Harrick's fiery eyes, you sense the relief of leading a team empty of basketball tradition into the Sweet 16.

Where, if you look into Williams' hound-dog eyes, you discover the question marks of being the winningest active coach and leaving the dance empty — again.

Rhode Island beat Kansas. But see, it runs deeper than that. It runs deeper than the handshake, the eyes, the overflow of emotions when playing basketball in mid-March.

When Kansas bowed out to Arizona in the Sweet 16 last year, it took Williams an entire offseason to recapture his heart, his team's heart, and face the world of great expectations, which expected Kansas, the greatest team in the nation, to win the national championship.

The world is what a national championship meant to Kansas. The world is who Williams believed he let down. He questioned himself as a coach for the first time in his life.

And so, Williams was a bit more calm this season. He wanted to be the underdog, yet he was the top seed. But the critics predicted Kansas would be the first top seed to go home. Williams told his team about his desire to win a national championship before they played Rhode Island.

Suddenly, a second-round game turned into the biggest game of his players' lives. Williams wanted to prove the world wrong — again.

With a win, Kansas would eclipse its school record for victories in a season. Kansas was three games from setting an NCAA record for victories in a season.

Kansas had two All-Americans, three former high school All-Americans on the bench, a 14-game winning streak and a coach desperate to end a yearlong quest in the championship game on March 30.

Instead, Kansas' season ended Sunday night.
Kansas became the seventh top seed not to make a Final Four appearance since 1985. Kansas has now returned to a regional title game just once after making 1991 and 1993 Final Four appearances.

Williams' nightmares will haunt him for another year. Harrick's story is just beginning.

You might remember Harrick. Nineteen months after he led UCLA to the 1995 national title, he was released. Rhode Island hired him in May, gave him the keys and told him to drive its 20-win team to San Antonio, Texas, in March.

In Harrick's first season at Rhode Island, he led the Rams to their second regional semifinal in school history.

Rhode Island was 23-8, an eighth-seeded team, and Raef LaFrentz's battered face after the game spoke volumes of the 80-75 upset.

Rhode Island scored 53 second-half points, one point better than Prairie View A&M scored the entire game against Kansas in its first-round matchup. Rhode Island was the first opponent in 25 games to shoot better than 50 percent against Kansas.

Suddenly, Harrick's return in the NCAA Tournament is a magical journey. Suddenly, he finds himself four days from coaching against his son, Jim Harrick Jr., a Valparaiso assistant coach.

Williams emerged from Kansas' locker room with red eyes.

The Passing Moment, not yet 30 minutes old, replayed in Williams' head, tugged at Williams' heart. He wished he could have had the last hour back, the last game back, but reality would slap his face early in the morning.

Kansas' season was over. The silent journey back to Lawrence would be long. The memories of another tasteless ending would be endless.

'Celebrations' showcases work of 6 local artists

ART REVIEW BY RUSSELL FORTMEYER • PHOTOS BY JILL JARSULIC

Manhattan is lucky to have its women artists. There is perhaps no other group of artistic individuals in town who are as well-organized or maintain as high a public profile than several of the six women represented in the excellent show "Celebrations" at Java Espresso and Bakery. The show will run through March 31.

If there is a local "school" or nouveau bohemian group in Manhattan—Margo Kren, Susan Oviatt, Sylvia Beeman, Ann Carter, Harriette Janke and Janice Lee very well could be it. And if we are to have a Bohemia, one could do much worse than these mature and accomplished artists.

Kren, who is the least represented in this show, was of late celebrated earlier this year on campus with a solo show in the Union art gallery. She, perhaps more than the others, has a regional influence and has hit a wonderful stride with her recent work.

One of the paintings, "Somewhere Along the Way," from that Union show, is included in "Celebrations" and seems to set the tone. It's the second of a three-painting series of the various stages in the life of a raven. At this stage, we see the raven in a mid-life panic of sorts—surrounded by dying animals and decay.

These women, like the raven, are all stopping to survey their lives, to respond to their respective environments. Some choose to do it with wit, others, specifically Kren, with an almost painful bluntness.

The work of these artists seeks to interpret what it is to be a woman, giving glimpses of feminine dreams and aspirations and the role of women in society. Many of the pieces play off of traditional female pursuits, particularly the quilts and the quasi-quilts of Janke and Oviatt, respectively.

Janke's "One Life," quilted cotton, is a highly constructed wall-hanging of dark, rich shades integrated by a twisting band of intricate tracery-like stitching. Janke describes it in a statement as "our changing lives going through darkness and light." Slightly reminiscent of recent Frank Stella paintings of the mechanics of blowing smoke, Janke's dynamic abstraction is more meaningful because it's a reflection of the viewer.

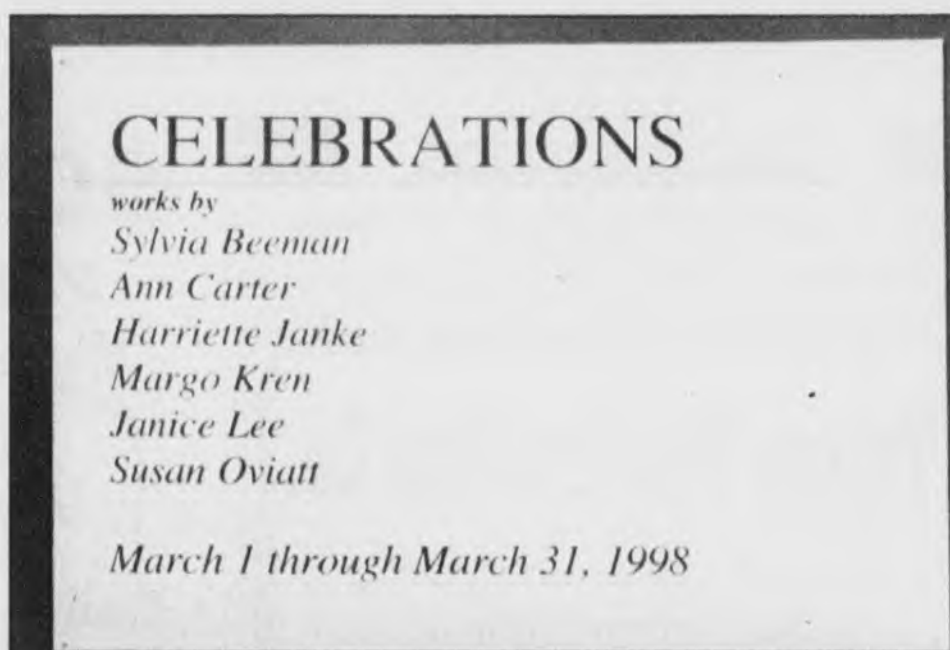

Similar to Janke's quilts, Oviatt recasts traditional watercolor by piecing smaller, diverse fragments together into quilt blocks. "Growing Season," a pieced watercolor of repeated "fabrics" in a geometric pattern, becomes larger by implication of a greater "quilt" in which it must surely fit. Oviatt raises questions of womanhood by making us look at quilting—a traditionally feminine pursuit—from a different perspective.

Carter fills in the lighter side of the group with her small, colorful cartoonish scenes of slightly skewed female domesticity. In Carter's "Camille Wonders What Her Husband Will Go After Next," monochrome with prismatic color, an older woman in a silly striped sundress stands beneath a hulking set of mounted horns, the shadow of which seems to be holding her in place. Read at face value, it's a commentary on the ego of men who hunt, while on the other hand you wonder if pathetic Camille is beginning to realize her husband is seeing other women.

Beeman's three-dimensional papier-mâché pieces add a psychological dream perspective to the show, obvious in "Fresh Dreams," a figural sculpture of an almost El Greco woman, horizontally floating and clasping her dreams.

That surreal quality is again found, somewhat subtly, in Lee's photographs, specifically "Sunflowers" and "Roses." The light in these photographs has the patina of graceful age, but renders the colors in a startlingly acidic way.

with work that stands apart from some more politically charged and less successful decidedly feminist work, the running current of contemporary womanhood makes its subtle point in an elegant manner. In understated Manhattan, that is something to celebrate.

'Grease' to be performed before movie re-release

CORBIN H. CRABLE
Kansas State Collegian

Zip up your leather jackets and hike up those poodle skirts because "Grease" is rocking its way into McCain Auditorium at 8 p.m. Tuesday.

Show info
The musical "Grease" shows at 8 p.m. Tuesday in McCain Auditorium.

"Grease," the beloved musical that whimsically explores adolescence in the 1950s, is celebrating its 20th anniversary this year. While the play is coming to McCain on Tuesday, the movie, which was released in 1978 and stars John Travolta and Olivia Newton-John, will be re-released Wednesday in theaters nationwide.

Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium, said he had no idea "Grease" was celebrating its 20th anniversary when he booked the musical. All he knew was the production would ensure a full house.

Martin was correct. In fact, "Grease" has been sold out since late February.

There is a waiting list for patrons who didn't get a chance to buy tickets, should any ticket holders not be able to attend the performance.

Martin said he hopes "Grease" will interest people in attending other performances at McCain.

"Grease" may cause some people to look at more productions in the McCain Performance Series," Martin said. "It might cause people to say, 'There's more going on in McCain than I thought.'"

While there are no big-name stars in this production of "Grease," Martin said it is the production itself that has caused a sold-out house.

"Some people want a performance by a star, and this production of 'Grease' doesn't have that," Martin said. "We're trying to sell tickets by the name of the attraction, not who's starring in it."

Martin also said he finds it interesting that certain time periods, such as the 1950s, are commercialized in the theater and big screen.

"It's interesting that there are certain periods in American history that are exploitable for entertainment, and that one can look back at the 1950s and romanticize it," he said. Before the performance begins at 8 p.m., there will be a sock hop and dance contest with one of the performers from the musical acting as disc jockey.

Also, instead of the regular McCain house ushers, representatives from the Delta Delta Delta sorority will usher for the evening.

After seeing "Grease" last year, Martin said the audience is in for a treat.

"If this production is anything like the one I saw last year, it will be a lot of fun," he said.

Art students study abroad

LORY STONE
Kansas State Collegian

Two K-State art students are studying in Norwich, England, through the K-State Department of Art and the Norwich School of Art and Design exchange program. The Norwich School is considered one of the five top schools in England.

Erica Henley, junior in art, and Kevin Siemers, junior in fine arts, are not the first to participate in this program. After a series of contacts with the Norwich school, the first student exchange took place in 1995.

Duane Noblett, associate professor of art, helped initiate the exchange.

"It started with me from the point of view that I had applied for it and maintained contact with persons from another school in England," Noblett said.

In 1992, Noblett took six K-State students to London, and it was in a visit to Norwich that he developed some contacts. Two years later, the schools began exchanging student artwork. Noblett said there were a total of three exhibitions, with a transfer of about 120 works. In 1995, the first student exchange took place.

There have also been a total of three faculty exchanges. K-State associate professor of art Gary Woodward is now teaching in Norwich.

"Gary Woodward did an exchange in 1994, so he has some experience," Noblett said.

In exchange for Woodward, K-State is host to Andy Vargo, head of graphic design at Norwich. Woodward's first-year art students will be taught by Vargo.

Noblett said there were several positive dimensions of this continued contact between K-State and the Norwich school, many of which are not strictly related to academics.

"Friendship is one dimension of the exchange. There is much dating and interest in people from the other country," Noblett said.

He said academics and cultural differences often pose a challenge.

"Academically, the English system is very different. Our students have to be able to stand diversity. Students from England tend to thrive in our country. They like the care and concern teachers have for the students," Noblett said, adding that in the English system, the professors are less personally involved with their students.

"The whole process of living in a different culture is enriching," Noblett said.

Concerning the faculty, Noblett said the only difference is what they expect of K-State students' behavior. The expectations pertaining to art, however, were similar.

"Artistically, there is no difference I would identify," Noblett said.

Noblett likened K-State to the Norwich school in the geography of both schools. He said the Norwich school is in a grain-producing place in England, not an urban area.

Increasing amount of light might lift students' spirits as springtime nears

SARA ZENGER
Kansas State Collegian

Getting closer to spring break isn't the only reason spirits are lifting.

Art Rathbun, counselor at University Counseling Services, said there is another reason why people may be in better moods during the spring and summer months.

"As we move toward winter, each day the amount of sunlight narrows and our physiology begins to change.

What happens as we get less sunlight is our bodies go into a preserving state," he said.

Rathbun said this results in less energy during the winter.

"We actually need 15 to 20 more minutes of sleep in the winter than in the summer," Rathbun said. "Because they didn't have electric lights, non-modern people went to bed earlier and got up later.

"Today, we have a tendency not to do what's natural, and we get the same amount or even less sleep during the winter."

Tynika Cook, junior in social work, said she isn't as active during the winter.

"During the winter, I'm more laid back and not as outgoing as I would be during the summertime when I want to get out and do things with friends," Cook said.

Rathbun said as spring begins, the longer days and warmer weather make people feel more energetic.

"As we move towards spring, our bodies really need to get out. We're re-energized and in a more active mood because we're starting to get more sun," he said.

Kevin Ness, senior in advertising, said he looks forward to becoming more active in warmer weather.

"I definitely look forward to springtime and warm weather. I'm sick of the cold, and there's more chances to do things outside, too," Ness said.

Even though spring break is coming at the perfect time to take advantage of this burst of energy, Rathbun said students need to be sure not to over-do it.

"In the spring we need to be careful to take on activities in a planned, normal way — not in a quick, extreme way," Rathbun said. "One of the dangers of spring break is you go down to Cancun and get sunburned or overexert and tear muscles, let alone getting too much to drink."

Spring break can also affect mental performance.

"If you come back and it takes you two weeks to get back in the study mode, you put yourself in academic danger. You need to be careful you don't get too much into the summer mode," Rathbun said.

However, Rathbun said the upcoming vacation is needed and can be a welcome break if precautions are taken.

"Students need a break somewhere in the academic year because of the rigors of class," he said. "You do need to watch you don't get too much sun or exercise because you're not used to it or get so relaxed it takes you awhile to get back into the study mode."

Refund program unpopular due to lack of publicity

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — For 20 years, many low-income Kansans have had the opportunity to get back from the state some of the money they spend to feed themselves and their families.

But the food sales tax refund program hasn't reached nearly as many people as it could because of its low profile, additional paperwork required to get the refund and the stigma to some that it's a form of welfare.

"It can come across as welfare. A lot of people won't touch the program if it is seen as a handout," Revenue Secretary John LaFaver said.

There's movement in the Legislature to rework the program into a food sales tax credit program that supporters say would be simpler and available to more Kansans.

But there's a problem: The House wants it and the Senate doesn't. Its fate is tied to the outcome of a tax relief proposal being battled back and forth between the two chambers.

The food sales tax refund is available to Kansans with a household income of less than $13,000 — slightly below the federal poverty level for a family of three.

It's open to those age 55 or older, or anybody, regardless of age, with children younger than age 18 at home, or permanently disabled people. The amount of annual refund for one person ranges from $20 to $40, depending on the income level.

LaFaver said there are about 100,000 households eligible for the refund. For the 12 months ending June 30, 1997, only 36,102 households filed, and the state paid $1.58 million in refunds.

The tax refund form also allows for a separate property tax refund for those with a household income of less than $25,000 and meeting the same eligibility requirements.

The legislation doesn't change the requirements for the property tax refund, which still would be handled by filing a separate form.

This year, Gov. Bill Graves proposed increasing the income eligibility for the food tax refund to $25,000.

He said the average household refund would jump from $43 to $85, and the number of those eligible would double.

LaFaver said the tax credit would be handled as a couple of lines on the state income tax form, vs. filing a separate form with more than a dozen lines to add and subtract.

"If you can't make it simple, that will be the biggest impediment, particularly if you're an elderly taxpayer," LaFaver said.

"Most people fill out an income tax form, and one more line won't be a problem for them."

According to the tax credit proposal, the income level would be capped at $25,000 adjusted gross income — which excludes some income sources such as pensions and alimony.

LaFaver estimated at least 238,000 households could take advantage of the tax credit, which would either increase the refund or reduce the taxpayer's liability.

Those not filing an income tax return could apply for a refund.

"These are the people who pay the greatest effective tax rate," LaFaver said. "They could be spending up to 80 percent of their income for food, and the state is saying you are paying more than your share."

British secretary backs out of visit

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — In the face of Israeli protests, British Foreign Secretary Robin Cook backed down Sunday from his plan to visit a contested Jerusalem neighborhood with Palestinian leaders, an Israeli official said.

The official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Cook would still make a low-profile visit to the Har Homa neighborhood, despite Israeli opposition.

The foreign secretary began a three-day European Union mission to the Middle East on Sunday to "unblock this deadlock in the peace process." Britain has the EU's rotating presidency. Cook, who went to Egypt on Sunday, was expected in Israel on Tuesday.

Cook said he would visit Har Homa, a planned 6,500-apartment housing project near east Jerusalem, to demonstrate "that we do not support expansion of settlements."

Another Israeli official, speaking on condition of anonymity, called the planned visit "provocative" and "a show of support for the Palestinian division of Jerusalem."

Groundbreaking a year ago for Har Homa, which is being built on land captured by Israel in the 1967 Mideast War and claimed by the Palestinians, provoked riots and halted peace talks.

The Palestinians want to establish a future capital in east Jerusalem, but Israel insists it will never relinquish sovereignty over any of the city.

The Orient House, the PLO's unofficial headquarters in Jerusalem, had said Cook would meet at the site, called Jabal Abu Ghneim in Arabic, with Palestinian negotiator Faisal Husseini and other Palestinian leaders.

In a Cabinet meeting Sunday, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said a visit by Cook to Har Homa with Husseini "would not be acceptable to the government of Israel."

Grievances filed against candidates

Getz said he was also concerned about the difference in T-shirt expenses reported by the candidates. He said Davis and Boomer's printing expenses were much lower than other candidates'.

"When the expenditure report came in, they only filed for a $30 expense for T-shirts," he said.

Getz said other candidates reported a higher screen-printing expense.

Mann, Davis' opponent in this week's runoff, said he thought his expense was around $150.

Davis said the price difference was easy to explain.

"It's very simple. That's what Ballard's charged us. That's what they quoted us," he said.

Mann wouldn't comment on Getz's grievances against Davis and Boomer.

"Andy and I are just focusing on our own campaign," he said.

Davis said he and Boomer have followed the election rules "to a T." He also said they haven't filed grievances against any other campaign.

"My team never filed one grievance because we wanted to focus on our campaign," he said.

"When we found that Mann and Macklin were in violation of election codes, we didn't report it."

"We just told them that they were breaking the codes and told them we would not turn them in," Davis said.

Davis said one example was when Mann's campaign staff members were chalking on curbs. He said he talked to Macklin instead of filing a grievance.

Davis said Mann's campaign has filed at least 30 grievances against him.

He said one grievance was that their posters were too big. Davis said their posters were exact regulation size.

"If you're going to take the time to file 18 grievances because posters are too big, then take the time to actually measure," he said.

Kerschen said Davis' figure of 30 grievances was "probably inaccurate."

"I promised myself I would never get into dirty politics. I feel like I'm getting the raw end of the deal," Davis said.

Mann could not be reached for comment on the number of grievances he or his campaign supporters have filed against Davis.

Speech addresses Asian-American issues

In one of the performances Kwong described how it felt to be a cross country runner as he ran around the theater and stage. He described how runners had a big inner-spirit, but were definitely not glamorous, because at the end of the race they stagger around like sick drunks.

"My favorite part was the cross country performance," Franz said. "It was just something everyone could relate to no matter if you were a cross country runner or not."

Lisa Yi, adviser to the Asian-American Student Union, said she appreciated Kwong for agreeing to appear as part of the month's functions.

"His performances have been very moving, especially when you grow up with families of different cultures, and when he talks everyone can relate in some way using a common baseball," Yi said.

Kwong is in the research phase of a new performance about space travel and astronaut experience.

He said his goal is to be the first performance artist in orbit.

State basketball champions crowned in Bramlage

a third-place trophy after an early game Saturday.

Nancy Rausch, who had been at games since Thursday, said this was the school's eleventh year in the state tournament. Though third place was disappointing, she said the team is young and should return to the tournament next year.

"We're really young, with only two seniors on the team," Nancy said. "We should be back next year."

After following her daughter to the state games for four years before her son's squad advanced, Nancy said she's getting familiar with the area.

"I'm starting to get to know Manhattan," she said. "It takes us 2 1/2 hours to get here, and we usually do some shopping while we're up here."

Logback said families such as the Rauschs are the reason tournaments are so profitable for the community.

"They're buying gas in our town, staying in our hotels, eating in our restaurants and shopping in our stores," she said. "Obviously there's an economic impact far-reaching from just the tournament itself."

Classified employees granted leave after snow day

JOHN HENDERSON
Kansas State Collegian

K-State classified employees who didn't show up to work March 9 will be granted administrative leave because of the snow storm, officials said Monday. Betty Vines, president of the Kansas Association of Public Employees, said the order was a result of an executive clarification by Gov. Bill Graves, who ordered all state employees to take the day off for inclement weather.

However, despite 15 inches of snow, several weather-related auto accidents and a state of emergency declared by Manhattan Public Works, K-State administration decided to keep the university open and classes in session.

Graves' original order, Vines said, was that all non-essential state employees would be given the day off. The administrations of all state agencies, such as the Highway Patrol and Kansas Department of Transportation, would have had to decide what employees were essential.

"The problem is, how do you decide at the time who is essential or non-essential?" Vines said.

"They should've had a chart done up ahead of time."

Gary Leitnaker, director of human resources for K-State, said there wasn't any such chart in existence, and there was no way for K-State administration to decide without prior notice which employees were essential.

In absence of a way to discern essential from non-essential, the decision was made to grant administrative leave to all classified employees — those not in administrative or academic positions — if they didn't make it to work that day, Leitnaker said.

Natalie Brockish, president of K-State's KAPE chapter, said several employees, including maintenance and custodial services, came in to work but had to leave because their supervisors weren't there to let them in.

Because of the miscommunication, employees who couldn't record a full day's work, even if they managed to show up for part of their shifts, were told they had to take the day off as part of their limited paid days of leave for personal reasons, Brockish said.

Brockish said she could only remember a Kansas governor issuing such an order twice in her 30 years working at K-State.

She now works as a lab technician in Call Hall's dairy labs and said she didn't come in that morning because of the poor road conditions.

"At 64, I don't want to go out and risk my life now," she said.

Brockish said those employees who made it to work for part of their shifts would be paid for that time.

Vines said she's glad K-State employees who didn't make it to work will get paid leave and won't have to take the day out of their own leave time. But, she said, employees who did make it to work will not be paid double.

"It's not fair, no. But it's a fact of life," Vines said.

She said the hours on March 9 won't count toward the 40 hours per week a classified employee would have to work to earn overtime pay on the weekend. In the past, employees could count paid leave days toward their 40-hour total for the week, allowing them to earn overtime for weekend labor even if they took off for the entire week.

Vines said she understands if the system seems confusing, but pointed out it's the system that custodial, maintenance, food service and technical service employees depend on for their wages.

"In my 19 years, it's never gotten any easier or simpler," she said.

Candidates square off in election

ANDREW D. WIMMER

Students will return to the polls Wednesday to decide who will be the next president and vice president of K-State's student body.

Tracey Mann, who earned 39 percent of the vote in last week's general election, will face Greg Davis, who received 30 percent.

SGA

What do we think?

The Collegian editorial board urges the student body to get out and elect its president.

Elections Committee Chair Ryan Kerschen said students will vote in the same manner as in last week's general election. They will need their Wildcat ID cards to vote in the K-State Student Union, Derby and Kramer Food Centers or Trotter Hall.

Kerschen said supporters of the candidates who did not make it to the run-off would probably decide the election.

"Those who voted for Davis or Mann last week will probably return and vote for them again," he said. "Those who voted for other candidates will swing the election results."

Mann, senior in political science and agricultural economics, said he will rely on tried-and-true campaign methods.

"I don't think we are going to change

Grant targeted for research in agriculture

The U.S. Department of Agriculture, through the Fund for Rural America, awarded K-State $840,000 in grant money for agriculture-related research.

The USDA solicited grant proposals for the Fund for Rural America program. The departments of Agronomy, and Animal Sciences and Industry drafted proposals for studies that would fulfill the USDA's requirements.

The Department of Agronomy received $400,000, and the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry received $440,000.

The agronomy department will work with the University of Nebraska in a study on the effects and management of pesticides and other chemicals on runoff in the Blue River Basin.

"It's a multi-state grant that has to do with the water quality in the Blue River that's here in Kansas and Nebraska," Gerry Posler, head of the department, said.

The Department of Animal Sciences and Industry will use its grant money to research safe methods of running small and very small meat packing plants, said Elizabeth Boyle, extension specialist and primary project director.

DEEP CREEK

Single-room schoolhouse unites small Kansas community

TRAVIS D. LENKNER

In 1928, Melvin Barry walked to school from his family's farm in the Zeandale Township.

In his eight years in the one-room Deep Creek School, Barry learned with 30 of his neighbors. One teacher taught all of the students, regardless of age, with the aid of a blackboard and coal-burning stove.

Seventy years later, Barry still lives in the Deep Creek area. His former school is now a community center — and a common bond for a community that is slowly losing its farming heritage.

Charles Kempthorne, a Deep Creek resident, edits "The Bullfrog," a community newsletter. He said some residents are natives of the area who still operate family farms. Others are relatively new to the area; they have built new homes and commute to Manhattan for work instead of operating a farm.

The region and its history are slowly fading, Kempthorne said.

"It's sort of dying like all of these communities are," he said. "The members of the older generation who knew this as a community have died, or are dying, and the new generation doesn't necessarily have roots here."

Kempthorne said the Deep Creek Community Center is all that's left for the neighborhood.

"It's about the only thing that does unify us anymore," he said.

Each January, community members gather at the building for a potluck dinner and town meeting. There, they elect officers for the Deep Creek Community Association, which maintains the building. Donations from the community are all that fund the building and its upkeep.

Riley County Extension Agent Mike Christian, who lives in the area and is this year's treasurer, said the meeting sets the tone for the coming year.

"It's discussed at the annual meeting what things need to be done during the year. The focus has been on maintaining and upkeep of the schoolhouse," Christian said. "We've refurbished the wood floor, put on a new roof and kept up the stone on the outside."

"That all comes from the annual meeting. It's what people in the community want done with the building," he said.

Christian also said the schoolhouse, which now is host to the Pillsbury 4-H Club, ice cream socials, weddings and funeral dinners, helps keep community spirit alive.

Anti-abortion protesters do not depress women who have abortions, speaker says

The mere presence of picketers at an abortion clinic does not have any real effect on post-abortion depression in women, a professor said Monday.

Catherine Cozzarelli, associate professor of psychology, demonstrated that point when she displayed her findings from two studies at her presentation titled "Anti-Abortion Picketing: Its History and Impact on Women Having Abortions."

"We were trying to figure out if encountering picketers and crossing picketing lines would have an impact on women and post-abortion depression," she said.

In her first study, Cozzarelli studied one clinic and 291 women.

Surveys were given to the women that asked questions relating to the effects of the picketers outside and the personal effects felt by the women who had to cross the picketing lines, she said.

The study revealed that 91 percent of the women saw picketers. Of those, 71 percent said the picketers tried to talk to them, and 54 percent said the picketers tried to stop them from going into the clinic.

"In this study, we found that women who had to deal with the picketers had higher levels of immediate post-abortion depression," Cozzarelli said.

The second study was larger, consisting of three clinics and 450 women. In this study, the women were also asked about 12 different emotions they might feel after entering a picketed clinic, Cozzarelli said.

"We found that just seeing picketers was not a guarantee that you will feel bad," Cozzarelli said. "Blocking the women or barricading the building does have an effect on women, at least in short-term depression."

Lecturer to define basic civil liberties during tonight's speech at Forum Hall

Barry Lynn, executive director of Americans United for Separation of Church and State since 1992, will present a lecture on civil rights and liberties at 7:30 tonight in Forum Hall at the K-State Student Union.

A forum will precede Lynn's lecture from 3:30 to 5 p.m. in Union 213.

Sponsored by the 1998 Dorothy L. Thompson Civil Rights Lecture Series at K-State, Lynn will present "Religious Right—Radically Wrong."

Robert Littrell, co-chairman of the lecture series, said, "Lynn's focus will be on the First Amendment and the freedom of religion."

"Lynn is an ordained minister and has a law degree and a degree in theology. He is also a member of the Washington, D.C., bar," Littrell said.

He said Lynn served as legislative counsel for the Washington, D.C., office of the American Civil Liberties Union for seven years, where he frequently worked on church-state issues and was in charge of the church-state project.

Lynn has appeared on several national television and radio shows to debate and discuss First Amendment issues, including "Today," "Nightline," "Crossfire," "Meet the Press," "Good Morning America," "NBC Nightly News," ABC's "World News Tonight," "CBS Evening News" and "Larry King Live."

Littrell said Lynn is a weekly commentator on church-state issues for United Press International Radio and served for two years as regular co-host of "Pat Buchanan and Company" on the Mutual Broadcasting System.

The Dorothy L. Thompson Civil Rights Lecture Series is in recognition of Thompson, who was associated with K-State from 1971 until her death in 1992.

Littrell said she contributed to the field of human rights on campuses in Kansas and across the nation. The lecture series is supported by Dorothy L. Thompson Lecture patrons and corporate sponsors, along with funding from various K-State departments.

NATIONAL NEWS

Child-care pioneer Dr. Spock dies at 94; 'Baby and Child Care' known worldwide

SAN DIEGO — Dr. Benjamin Spock, who wrote the how-to guide for bringing up the baby boom generation, has died at 94.

Spock died Sunday at home in La Jolla of respiratory failure. He had suffered a heart attack, a stroke and several bouts of pneumonia in recent years.

His first book, "Common Sense Book of Baby and Child Care," was published in 1946 at the very start of the post-World War II baby boom and became the bible to millions of parents.

In it, Spock encouraged parents to trust and respect themselves and listen to their children. For example, he told them it is better to feed babies when they want to eat instead of adhering to a strict feeding schedule.

His seemingly simple advice was a revelation for many, and "Baby and Child Care," as it was called in later editions, went on to become the biggest-selling book in the United States after the Bible. It has been translated into 39 languages and sold nearly 50 million copies worldwide.

Despite the millions in book royalties he earned, he and his wife, Mary Morgan, recently experienced financial problems because of his deteriorating health. Just 2 1/2 weeks ago, she pleaded for help in paying Spock's $10,000-a-month medical bills.

A public service for Spock was scheduled for Friday at St. James By the Sea Episcopal Church in La Jolla. His body was to be cremated.

Cohen says armed forces should ensure housing separation during basic training

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Defense Secretary William Cohen told the Army, Navy and Air Force on Monday they could continue to mix the sexes in basic training but should ensure they are housed in separate areas, if not separate buildings.

He also told the three branches to increase supervision for the trainees in their first weeks in the services and toughen their physical training.

The trainees share the same buildings now but generally are assigned to separate floors.

Cohen also asked the services to increase the number of female recruiters and female trainers and put more emphasis on core military values during basic training.

In December, a blue-ribbon panel led by former Sen. Nancy Kassebaum Baker, R-Kan., recommended separate housing and, for most part, separate training for men and women. Only the Marine Corps separates its trainees during basic training.

In draft reports submitted last week to Cohen, the Army, Navy and Air Force rejected building separate housing units. Most women in basic training live on the top floors of buildings and their male colleagues are housed on separate floors below.

what we've been doing," Mann said. "If it's not broke, why fix it? We're still out there pushing our issues and going out to groups we may have missed during the general election."

Mann said the extra time allowed him and running mate Andy Macklin to visit K-State-Salina and push their issues there.

"We have some issues that will benefit K-Staters in Salina," he said.

Chris Van Tyle and Bret Glendening, the third- and fourth-place finishers last week, have thrown their support to Davis.

Davis, senior in marketing and management information systems, said his supporters will be out in force this week, despite midterm exams and spring break fever.

"We plan on going to as many meetings, and campaigning really hard this week," Davis said. "We've reassembled the troops, and we are pressing on."

Davis said his campaign didn't use some campaign tools as much as it could have during the regular campaign, so it has made minor changes for this week's runoff.

"We did not do a very good job of chalking the sidewalks," Davis said. "Other candidates did a better job. Since we are by no means politicians, this has all been a learning process for us. We'll make some changes and hopefully get our names and issues out to the students."

Davis said campaigning for president is a priority for him, running mate Jim Boomer and their supporters, but keeping up with classes is just as important.

"I plan on campaigning until midnight and studying until three in the morning," he said. "It will be another long week, but we are ready for it."

Student Body President Tim Riemann found himself in the same position as Mann and Davis last year. Riemann said he and Vice President Jennafer Neufeld tried to keep a steady pace through both the elections.

"During the run-off, we focused our campaign on getting the vote out and gaining support from those candidates that didn't make it to the run-off," he said.

Deep Creek schoolhouse remains symbol of community togetherness

"It's still common to everyone. That's the key," he said. "It's part of the past that people can still connect with. It's something they can be a part of."

Though the area has changed, Christian said the schoolhouse and its history remain, which helps establish it as the center of the community.

"There's a lot of new people in the area. We've only been here for five years," he said. "Thirty years ago, it was basically a farming community of people whose families had grown up in the community. Since that time, we've added new houses and people."

"The old school is probably the focal point that we all have in common," Christian said.

Eldon Henton, a longtime Deep Creek resident, said having a center for community events helps form bonds that were historically stronger.

"There's some new people who go there, and that helps," he said. "I can remember when, 50 years ago, I lived on a main road and knew everybody who drove by — their cars and everything."

"Now you don't hardly know anybody," Henton said. "We just don't get together like we used to."

Children's voices still fill the former school once every month, when the Pillsbury 4-H Club has its meetings. The club is celebrating its 50th year, and community leader Harold Bailey, a charter member of the club, said it is also a sign of a strong community.

"We've got 30 members in the club this year, which is the strongest it's ever been. Normally we've got right around 17 or 18 members," he said. "We've got a really active, parent-or-ented club. The parents are the secret of this club."

Bailey said one of the club's main projects is also an attempt to form ties between younger and older members of the community.

"Each of our families adopts a grandparent. They take someone older who's within the community, and they adopt them for a year," he said.

Community members like Barry interact with 4-H members as part of the program, offering their wisdom and historical knowledge as incentives for the youth to be involved in the project.

Barry said he can recall his days in the school — and his breaks from it. "I can remember one of the boys shooting a skunk under the schoolhouse, and we didn't go to school for two or three days," he said.

Near the end of his years in the school, Barry said blizzardlike conditions made walking to school a pleasure.

"We had about a 5- or 6-inch wet snow, then it rained on that and turned cold and froze," he said. "We skated to school with our ice skates over the fields for at least three weeks. You just put your skates on, got out the door and skated all the way to school."

An outdoor toilet is still used at the building, but a coal shed and barn that Barry remembers are long gone. Ted Anderson, another Deep Creek native, attended school there during the 1930s.

Anderson said the schoolhouse was the center of Deep Creek activity in the '30s, too.

"That was the center of the neighborhood at that time. That's all we had that long ago. Most everything revolved around the schoolhouse," he said.

That still holds true. Barry said new residents and natives still flock to the building for many events, which keeps the community as tightly knit as possible in modern times.

"All of these people have moved into the community and built new homes, so when they have the potlucks and meetings, that does help the community," he said.

Barry said he's glad the schoolhouse has been kept as a center for community activities, especially as the area has changed through the years.

"The farming families have really decreased, even though there's more houses out here," he said. "It's sort of like a suburb of Manhattan, not a farming community."

Anderson said residents who remember the building as a school are now few and far between.

"There's not very many of us left around anymore," he said.

Each vote becomes more important in run-off

In the run-off election on Wednesday, each and every vote counts.

Turnout for the general elections last week was impressive, and with 3,000 people voting for presidential candidates, overall voting was up 17 percent.

The general election determined widespread leadership positions, and the run-off is just as important for the presidential elections. With five tickets, it was unlikely that any one candidate would get 51 percent of the votes.

Historically, voter turnout for the run-off election is less than turnout for the general election.

Presumably, supporters for Greg Davis/Jim Boomer and Tracey Mann/Andy Macklin will return to the polls. Because the first race was close, individuals who voted for other candidates or chose not to participate have an important swaying capacity. Each vote counts.

This election is not about affiliations and friendships. It's about issues and ideas. Educate yourself on how the candidates stand on things you care about and vote with your conscience.

Davis and Boomer said the most important issue that needs to be faced is the communication gap that currently exists between the student body and student government.

Their leadership plan includes seven new 20-member committees to help people step out of their comfort zone and get involved. They support membership limits for Student Senate, further commercialization of the K-State Student Union, a user-fee-based privilege fee system and expansion of bicycle facilities on campus.

Mann and Macklin said the most important issue facing students next year will be advising. They promised to work with students, faculty and administration to enhance advising throughout the university.

Their leadership plans include a book-swap plan and the creation of a parking permit for Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. They support a conditional student fee to fund Hale Library, further commercialization of the Union and expansion of bicycle facilities on campus.

This is your opportunity to make a difference. Back the candidate you believe in. Make your vote count.

Victims of policy

Civilians are stuck between Iraq and a hard place

So Kofi Annan flies to Baghdad, smokes a few stogies with Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz, and they broker a last-minute deal that, in essence, says Iraq will comply with agreements signed several years ago. Saddam Hussein declares victory. Hussein also declared victory when he invaded Kuwait, when the Gulf War ended and at the final gun of Super Bowl XXXI.

We're at the dawn of a brand-new same-old age with Iraq. We're searching for weapons of mass destruction, they're hiding them, and thus the game continues. At least, until Hussein tires of the game and refuses to play by the rules so delicately negotiated.

The sad thing about all of this is it's not a game, despite how the civilian population of Iraq has become a collection of 20 million pawns to be propped up and moved around the disfigured chessboard of the Middle East.

The U.N. embargo was crafted with the intention of forcing the Iraqi populace into uprising and overthrowing Hussein, but the reins of power are too tight, and in the political tug-of-war the innocents are being torn asunder.

Is it surprising that American policy toward Iraq is a high-tech, unconventional-warfare version of hide-and-seek? Everything in the American culture is a game. Don't look at the modern American judicial system and tell me it's based around the empirical discovery of facts, evidence and truth. It's a game show. Follow the rules, evidence is admissible in these circumstances but not those, and we'll make it "fair." Not right, but fair.

Sadly, our foreign policy can't even take "fair" into account in Iraq. Nobody wants to see civilians die; the American urge to do something even when nothing should be done has landed troops in more than one quagmire (I'll take "Somalia" for $100, Alex).

But assisting the Iraqi population remains next-to-impossible without bolstering the Iraqi military machine. The priorities of the Iraqi government have been shown, and its people are low on the list.

So what, then, should American policy toward Iraq be? We're at a rather solid impasse for the moment. Until U.N. inspectors find solid evidence of weapons of mass destruction — and they won't, Iraq has gotten good at hide-and-seek since the Gulf War — or reveal that Iraq isn't hiding any (heh), the sanctions will continue, and unrest in Iraq will continue to grow. This unrest, though, will manifest as Hussein lashes out at the United States, not as internal strife.

When the next gauntlet is thrown, though, watch the international community collectively roll its eyes and stare back at the United States. Let's face it: Nobody's going to sit back and wait for France to do anything. The United States has, sadly, established itself as the world's police officer (or, at least, beat cop of the Persian Gulf).

The United States is the United Nations in form and essence; censures from the United Nations carry even less weight without American frothing and trigger-pulling. Remember Panama? The United States was condemned by the august body of the United Nations, and Canada didn't start carpet-bombing Minneapolis.

The impasse of sanctions and inspections must be crossed as soon as possible, for the sake of the Iraqi people and to let international relations evolve beyond the state of the United States thumping anyone laying in the path of the New World Order.

There have been calls for the removal of Saddam Hussein in the House and Senate, apparently under the impression that nothing's worse than a mustache-bearing, chemical-spraying crazy person as dictator. While it's not beyond the CIA's ability to "remove," probably with a couple of tons of explosives, Iraq's head of state, it wouldn't be advisable for several reasons.

First of all, we're not at war. Maybe it's a simplistic or idealistic approach to politics, but I'm still of the mindset that there are some things you don't do to countries in peacetime. I disagree with President Ford's executive decision against assassination, however, in the mindset that in the moral infection of war it makes sense that vaporizing the people with responsibility for the actions of a nation is better than filling mass graves with the starving people who were marching and fighting to stay alive or to feed families.

Secondly, removing Hussein now would set a dangerous precedent, and I'm not sure I want the American government to have that option open to it. It can't decide what to do with a budget surplus, much less which government leader it should knock off next. And let's not even address the power vacuum that would form in the region should Hussein assume room temperature.

Finally, if America wants to hoist itself as the world's defender of democracy, it needs to let people forge their own future.

Granted, if and when the Iraqi people do so it will be bloody and painful, but it will be a future they have chosen and will therefore be more valuable than any gift a people could receive from outside.

America needs to remember the distinction between the Iraqi government and the Iraqi people. One has proven itself a dangerous, unpredictable element in an already volatile region. The other is paralyzed between diametrically opposed forces, but it waits for the games to end and for life to begin again.

March blows through with revenge, psychosis

I thought I knew her so well.

March, that is.

In years past, March brought me great hope and high expectations. Usually at this time I'm looking forward to warmer weather, the NCAA Final Four and spring break. Not true this year. March isn't just mad, she's ticked off. Something permanent is stuck in her gluteus maximus, and yours truly has been on the receiving end (no pun intended).

Whatever possessed March to dump an estimated 15 inches of snow on us? We should probably be grateful all the winter season wasn't as bad as last week. Still, last week went above and beyond the call of duty for changing seasons.

It did, however, give Gov. Bill Graves an opportunity to exercise some real power. Giving non-essential state employees the day off was a nice gesture. Considering the number of schools that closed, non-essential state employees didn't have to, or weren't supposed to, scramble to find places for their children to hibernate for the day.

Unfortunately, none of this power extended itself to our beloved institution. The company line said it was because the university had full power, and the streets of Manhattan were passable. Sure, the streets were passable; anyone who walked to campus and almost got hit by sliding cars knows just how passable the roads were. On behalf of all of us, a heartfelt thanks.

In fact, the streets were just another part of March madness. I'm sure freshman Mindy Hines had nothing better to do than get hit by a car in the dimly lit crosswalk of Denison Avenue and Platt Street. A day later there was still blood in the street. Wouldn't that tell any simple-minded individual that the accident was serious? Again, company line, this time from the city of Manhattan, said there are more concerns for safety on Manhattan Avenue than on Denison Avenue. Hooray! That's noble.

That's crap. All streets and avenues leading into and out of the university should be of concern. If they're not, lie and say they are. Better to pretend to be stupid than sound stupid.

You mean to tell me no money can be allocated to help light crosswalks better? No measly tuition dollars, student fees or city taxes? A good friend of mine lives right next to that crosswalk. I mean, she's a blonde and all, but I guess I'd still like her and everyone else who uses crosswalks to be safe. Gee, maybe if we jaywalk we'll have a better chance at saving lives.

That same friend of mine told me last week that she's still my friend, even though I've been "pissy" lately. Do you ever have one of those months? No, it's not the girly thing. It might very well be senioritis. Whatever it is, just as I'm trying to snap out of it, along comes some freak who knocks me back down. Just call me Pissy Pamela. Why is it that when I'm going north on the sidewalk, Ken and Barbie are coming south on the same sidewalk, and are walking side by side? Look people, there's only so much passing room. Is it so hard for you to move the heck out of the way? Try walking behind your companion just for one second so we don't have to exchange shoulder bruises.

I'm telling you, it's been one psychedelic month.

What's happened to all of my favorite teams, being knocked out in the first or second round of the Big Dance? I'm a true Wildcat, but just for the state's sake, you can't help but feel sorry for the Jayhawks. Their spring break came a bit too early.

My spring break, and I imagine yours, too, can't come soon enough. Not that I'm itching to hit the beach in a bikini. I don't think Shamu the whale is looking for a playmate. No, it's a great time for job interviews. The sooner I make more money than Milli Vanilli, the better. There's only so much beer and pizza that can sustain a person.

Already, though, I've heard horror stories from friends around the country who have purchased special package deals from (ir)reputable agencies that specialize in taking advantage of spring break revelers. On the one hand, we're all adults. It's up to us not to fall for some of the oldest tricks in the book. But if you still get scammed by one of these operations, do all you can to kick some serious butt. Anyone who puts the screws to students is sure to come back in the next life as a presidential intern.

Yes, I said presidential intern. What else is there to say? Nine weeks into the story, it still won't go away. The news media are still mad for Monica. Not me. Not this week.

This week I'm mad at Mary Kay. Mary Kay LeTourneau was once a respected grade school teacher. Now she's a convicted sex offender. She bore the child of the 13-year-old boy she raped. At 35 years of age, she rightfully lost her husband and her four daughters because of this heinous crime. She caught a big break, though, when the judge agreed to no jail time as long as Mary Kay stayed away from the boy and sought counseling. But the freak nasty Mary Kay couldn't leave well enough alone, and one year later, she's pregnant again. She's back in jail, and calls the boy the "love of her life."

Didn't I tell you March was mad?

Weather not reason to cancel all classes

Editor,

I am writing in response to the Tuesday editorial "KSU should have closed classes because of the snow." While I disagree with the title and overall theme of the article, I also think the rationales behind the argument were rather feeble.

First of all, I personally have experienced weather conditions far worse than they were on March 9 and have not had classes canceled as a result. I live at least two miles away from campus, I drive a car with wheels and I had no difficulty arriving to class on time.

Several arguments were raised in the article that were supposed to be supportive but clearly were insubstantial. First, although local school districts closed their schools down for the day, they had good reason to do so. For one, it is difficult to control a school bus full of some 65 children on an icy road. In addition, imagine the possible lawsuits that could follow an accident that could endanger and possibly harm the children on the bus. The school districts made the proper decision in closing the schools.

It was also noted in the editorial that Manhattan postal workers were given the day off as well. I see two reasons why postal workers should have been given the day off on Monday. First, I don't think anyone should expect anyone else to subject themselves to the frigid conditions present on Monday for eight hours. Second, for those postal workers who drive, the likelihood of crashing their car as a result of slipping on ice is far greater when they spend eight hours on icy roads delivering mail as opposed to traveling two miles to and from campus.

Finally, it was noted that President Jon Wefald behaved stubbornly for neglecting to cancel classes. Wefald did nothing more than provide students at K-State with what they are paying for: an education. Students are never forced to attend class on any given day; it's a matter of choice. In one of my classes on March 9, although a take-home test was due, my professor was kind enough to extend the test deadline until Tuesday because some students could not attend class. Classes were offered on March 9 for students who were willing to attend. If you didn't want to attend class on March 9, but you would have felt guilty otherwise, try living with the consequences of your actions.

Reader concerned with view on Scouts

Editor,

I am concerned about the column published Friday written by Sam Sackett, titled "Courts Decision to Allow Homosexual Scouts Leaves it with Black Mark, Bad Deed for Day."

The same day this column was published, I was attending a conference for the Kansas chapter of the National Association of Social Workers. Professional, licensed social workers and students of social work throughout the state of Kansas attended this conference. I find it unfortunate for K-State that members of NASW were exposed to this.

Although I do support Sackett's freedom to share his opinion, I am disappointed that he allowed his homophobia to cloud his judgment in writing a column not based on interests or facts. What I was left with from Sackett's words was a man who gave an opinion based on his position as a conservative, not the interest of values and ethics for the tradition of Boy Scouts.

I was appalled by some of the statements Sackett made. For example, he wrote, "I have had enough of this balderdash. Homosexuals and other extreme leftist groups who want their lifestyles to be made known to young men just don't seem to understand that their twisted perception of sexuality isn't what everyone in this country wants for their children."

First of all, I do not see how a small part of an individual's identity has anything to do with where he or she stands on a political continuum or how Sackett can generalize gays as a group of people recruiting children for their cause. Secondly, issues of gay, lesbian or bisexual rights is not a matter of leftist groups trying to push some kind of agenda.

In his column, Sackett described the values of the Boy Scout tradition to be "trustworthy, loyal, helpful, friendly, courteous, kind, obedient, cheerful, thrifty, brave, clean and reverent." Nowhere in these values did I read heterosexual.

I do not understand how a gay man could not be capable of upholding this code of ethics. A gay man has the capability of being as courteous or kind as anyone else and have the same faith in a spiritual being.

Finally, I don't understand how the rights of Americans are being threatened. I am getting the impression that Sackett's concern is that children are being recruited to be gay or lesbian. I believe lack of knowledge and homophobia is the reason there is a fear that this will happen.

I would like to suggest further that Sackett perceives an agenda because of his own moral agenda as a conservative. Logically, I do not see how anyone would want America's children to subject themselves to oppression that not only threatens their jobs and their stability, but their lives. If anything, I see a means of support for adolescents who face these threats.

I fear that social workers across the state of Kansas will perceive K-State to be a homophobic university. This is unfortunate.

My advice to Sackett is to think twice before writing such a column, and, even if it is your opinion, use critical thinking, judgment and facts to back your opinion.

HELPING HANDS

Students responsible for behind-the-scenes work of opera

STORY BY CORBIN H. CRABLE • PHOTOS BY CLIF PALMBERG

For the hundreds of hours they put into their work, they seldom receive the attention of their acting counterparts — yet without them the production could not go on. They are the stage crew.

Overseeing the stage crew for the opera "Vanessa," presented by the KSU Opera Theatre, is Jeremy Seemann, junior in theater. Seemann's role as stage manager fulfills a requirement for his stage management class, a 600-level course open to both graduate and undergraduate students through the Department of Speech Communication, Theater and Dance, but only with the instructor's permission.

This year, Seemann is the only undergraduate student in the class. In stage management, aspiring stage managers are taught how to interface with different areas of stage management and how best to communicate with actors.

The students in the class are required to be stage managers for one theatrical production throughout the entire school year, and the process can take as long as three months to complete.

Show info
"Vanessa" shows at 8 p.m. March 17-19 in Nichols Theatre.

As stage manager, it is Seemann's responsibility to manage nearly all aspects of the production from costume changes to light cues to making sure all actors report to the performance on time.

"I not only can, but I have to know what's going on," Seemann said.

Marci Maullar, managing director, stage management director and marketing director for the production, said she agreed with Seemann.

"A good stage manager wants to know what's going on everywhere," said Maullar, who teaches Seemann's Stage Management class of six students. "We try to train them as professionals."

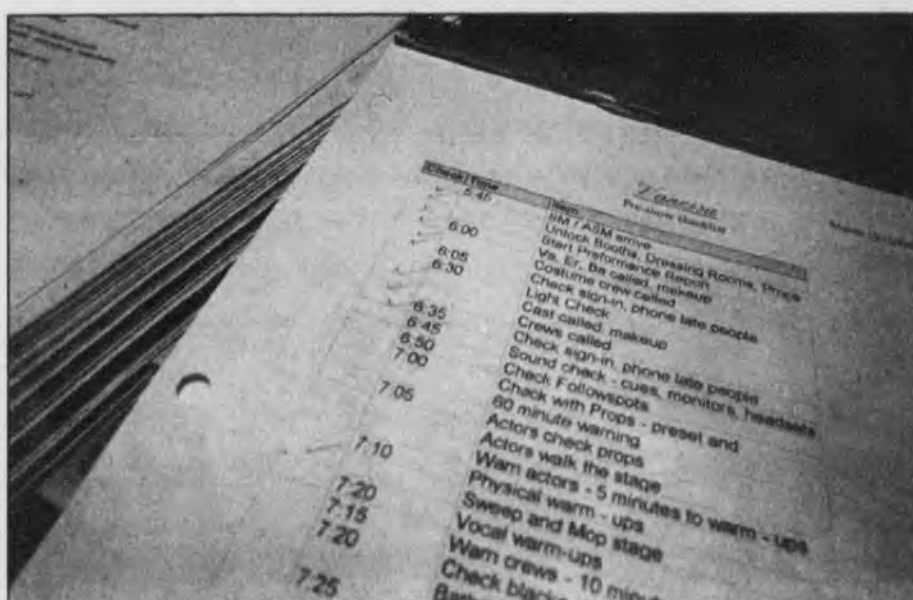

Sometimes, Seemann said, communication with the actors in the production can be a problem.

"Knowing what's going on and dictating it are two different things," he said. "Everyone involved in the play knows what they want from the stage manager, but they don't realize he's in charge of it all."

Maullar said she also realized the large role the stage manager plays in being a part of the production.

"The stage manager is the center of everything," she said.

"He's absolutely vital to every production."

LEFT:
SEEMANN CARRIES A CHECKLIST OF ACTIVITIES THAT MUST BE COMPLETED BEFORE EACH PERFORMANCE. SEEMANN'S DUTIES AS STAGE MANAGER BEGIN 2 1/2 HOURS BEFORE SHOW TIME.

When preparing for "Vanessa," Seemann arrives 2 1/2 hours before the show begins.

In this time span, the stage manager must do everything from making sure the props are in the correct places to making sure the actors are in their costumes to giving the countdown to show time.

The stage manager's responsibilities don't end after the production.

At the end of the evening, the stage manager must make sure all dressing rooms and prop cabinets are locked and write a show report detailing how the show went overall, noting any successes or problems.

lems the actors or crew faced before, during or after the performance.

Mark White Jr., senior in vocal performance, portrays the Old Doctor in "Vanessa," and said he was appreciative of the work the stage manager and stage crew put into the production.

"We can't go out on stage without them," he said.

"There's a lot of technical aspects to the show that we can't do without the stage crew."

At one point in the performance, it took five crew members to help White with a costume change. The change took only two minutes.

Rachel Stigge, senior in musical theater, portrays the Old Baroness, and said there would be no show without the stage crew.

"Every time the actors fly offstage and come back in a different costume two minutes later, that's the stage crew at work. They do a fabulous job," she said.

Seemann said his experience as a stage manager might lead him to a career in the field.

"The cast has been wonderful to work with, and I've enjoyed the whole process," Seemann said, "so it's a possibility."

Spineless baseball predictions offered after Hawks choke in NCAA Tourney

Preliminary note: There was a typographical error in my column last week. It read that KU would win the NCAA Tournament. It was meant to read that UK would win the NCAA Tournament.

Now that the Jayhawks have performed the biggest choke since Darth Vader in the opening scene of Star Wars, basketball is officially over in the state of Kansas, thus leaving only baseball on the immediate horizon. So instead of scratching your head about the Jayhawks' latest debacle, try pondering some of these timeless questions, courtesy of Baseball '98.

Is there still a team in Kansas City, Mo.?

Are you allowed to play in the big leagues if you don't have a goatee and sideburns?

If Mark McGwire hits a ball so hard it goes over the fence, flies all the way around the world, comes back over the other side of the stadium and is caught by the center fielder, is he out?

These queries and more are finally answered in the first, and preferably the last, installment of "10 Spineless Baseball Predictions."

•"Wait 'til last year!"
Kevin Brown? Gone. Moises Alou? Gone. Al Leiter, Rob Nenn, Devon White, Jeff Conine, Tony Saunders and Darren Daulton? All gone. After a dramatic 10th-inning win in Game 7 of the World Series last October, the Marlins have trimmed more fat than Al Sharpton this offseason. Yeah, they still have Gary Sheffield, but then again, so did the Brewers in '89. Expect team mascot Billy the Marlin to join the starting rotation shortly after the All-Star break.

•Maris' record becomes McGwire's mark

Remember Nike's ad campaign to elect Ken Griffey Jr. president in '96? Well, Junior might have an outside shot at winning the county treasurer's race after Mark McGwire sinks his hooks into National League pitching, against which he hit 24 homers in the last 44 games of the year. With a full season series against the Cubs and Rockies, Big Mac's approval ratings will soar as high and as far as his prodigious home runs. Roger Maris' record might shatter in mid-September.

•Rocky Mountain high jinks will be exposed

Before joining the Rockies in 1993, Andres Galarraga averaged 16 home runs and 67 RBIs a season. Since then, the Big Cat has averaged 34 homers and 116 RBIs. Is that legit, or are any statistics generated in Coors Field as phony as Frank Sinatra's hair? We shall find out when Galarraga takes his show to Atlanta, where he'll hit no more than 30 long balls this season.

Don't strain your ears trying to hear the Big Cat's soft meow.

•Déjà vu all over again
The Braves reaching the postseason is about as predictable as Roy Williams crying after a season-ending loss. Going out on a limb here — in a rematch of the most politically incorrect sporting event in modern history, the Braves and Indians will square off in October as they did in 1995.

Different season. Different rosters. Same result: Braves in six. In fact, if Ted Turner trades for Randy Johnson, as he's threatening to do, look for Atlanta to win somewhere between 161 and 163 games this year.

•What a race/what a disgrace
The AL East boasts the finest division in baseball, top to bottom. Watch out, Baltimore. With the likes of the Blue Jays, Yankees and Red Sox, last year's champs could finish as low as fourth. Conversely, the NL Central is again the weakest of the bunch. Two words: Cubs lose! St. Louis should eventually limp away with the division title. Heck, they might even win one game in the first round of the playoffs.

•KC at the bat
Things are so bleak at Kauffman Stadium that the Royals' list of spring training invites includes Lee Smith and Terry Pendleton, both of whom are so overweight they can stand still and cover more ground at their positions than Ozzie Smith could in his prime. Why not just give Greg Luzinski or Steve Balboni a tryout? By May it will dawn on Royals fans that they're still mad about the strike of '94. However, more post-game concerts by Alabama and Huey Lewis and the News will keep them in their seats.

•Other rumblings
At least one of the new expansion teams in Arizona and Tampa Bay will have a better record than the Pirates, Reds, Royals, Cubs, Athletics and Twins.

The most intriguing battle will be between Cubs manager Jim Riggleman and Royals manager Tony Muser, whose race to the unemployment line should be complete in early July.

Yankees pitcher Hideki Irabu, George Steinbrenner's high-priced Japanese import, will be named MVP of the All-Star Game in July — the Minor League All-Star Game.

Tennis team sweeps Tech in Big 12 match

DAN CATALDI
Kansas State Collegian

The K-State women's tennis team rolled to a 9-0 sweep over conference rival Texas Tech on Saturday in Lubbock, Texas.

The Wildcats were solid throughout their lineup as they put out their most convincing effort of the season.

"Up and down the line it was our best performance," K-State coach Steve Bietau said.

The meet, which was scheduled to be played outdoors but was moved inside because of the weather, was not expected to be an easy win for the Cats.

"We thought we could win, but we didn't expect 9-0," No. 1 singles player Yana Dorodnova said. "This was our strongest performance."

The Red Raiders already had posted conference wins over Nebraska, Oklahoma and Oklahoma State earlier in the season.

"Tech was a team I thought we could beat if we played well," Bietau said. "But, I never really considered the idea that we would beat them 9-0."

The Cats were again led by Dorodnova, the country's No. 63 player. She continued her winning ways by handing Texas Tech's Zana Ziebnik her first loss of the season.

"This is the best tennis I have played in my life," Dorodnova said.

Ziebnik, ranked No. 40 in the nation, had been playing well. She was recently named the Big 12 player of the month after starting the year undefeated before losing in straight sets to Dorodnova, 6-3, 6-2.

This win runs Dorodnova's record to 10-1 overall, 3-1 in Big 12 play. Her mark includes wins over the No. 7, No. 40 and No. 62 players in the country. Her lone blemish was a tough loss to Texas' Sandy Surephong, the No. 3 player in the nation.

CATS TENNIS RESULTS

Saturday at Texas Tech	SINGLES
1. Yana Dorodnova def. Zana Ziebnik 6-3, 6-2	2. Anna Pampoulou def. Amanda Earhart 6-4, 6-7 (4), 6-4
3. Martina Popisilova def. Lakshmi Ravindra 5-7, 6-3, 7-5	4. Eva Novotna def. Sarada Ravindra 6-3, 6-3
5. Lena Pilipchak def. Christine VanRegenmorter 6-0, 6-1	6. Dinah Watson def. Erica Dopson 7-6, 6-0
DOUBLES
1. Dorodnova/Pilipchak def. Ziebnik/Earhart 8-6	2. Popisilova/Novotna def. L. Ravindra/VanRegenmorter 8-6
3. Pampoulou/Watson def. S. Ravindra/Misty Meyer 8-4

As far as qualifying for the NCAA Championships, Bietau is in a difficult position to talk about Dorodnova's prospects because he sits on the selection committee.

"She's done about everything she can possibly do up to this point," he said. "She has had a lot of good wins and then one great win."

Also, helping lead the Cats to the Red Raider sweep was the debut of freshman Martina Popisilova, a native of the Czech Republic, who played in her first matches as a Wildcat after joining the team March 1. Clerical difficulties with the SAT testing offices delayed her arrival to K-State.

She had an immediate effect, beating the Red Raiders' Lakshmi Ravindra in three sets, 5-7, 6-3, 7-5.

At No. 2 doubles, she paired with Eva Novotna to garner her first doubles victory as a member of the Cats' tennis team.

Popisilova's addition to the team was one that created an unusual situation for Bietau, who had a tough time adjusting the Cats' lineup.

"We weren't sure what to do with her," Bietau said. "We didn't know where to stick her, how she would respond or what might happen. She handled the situation pretty well."

Bietau was happy with Popisilova's performance. He said she was forced to make adjustments to win the match.

"There was some pressure in that situation," he said. "She handled the situation pretty well."

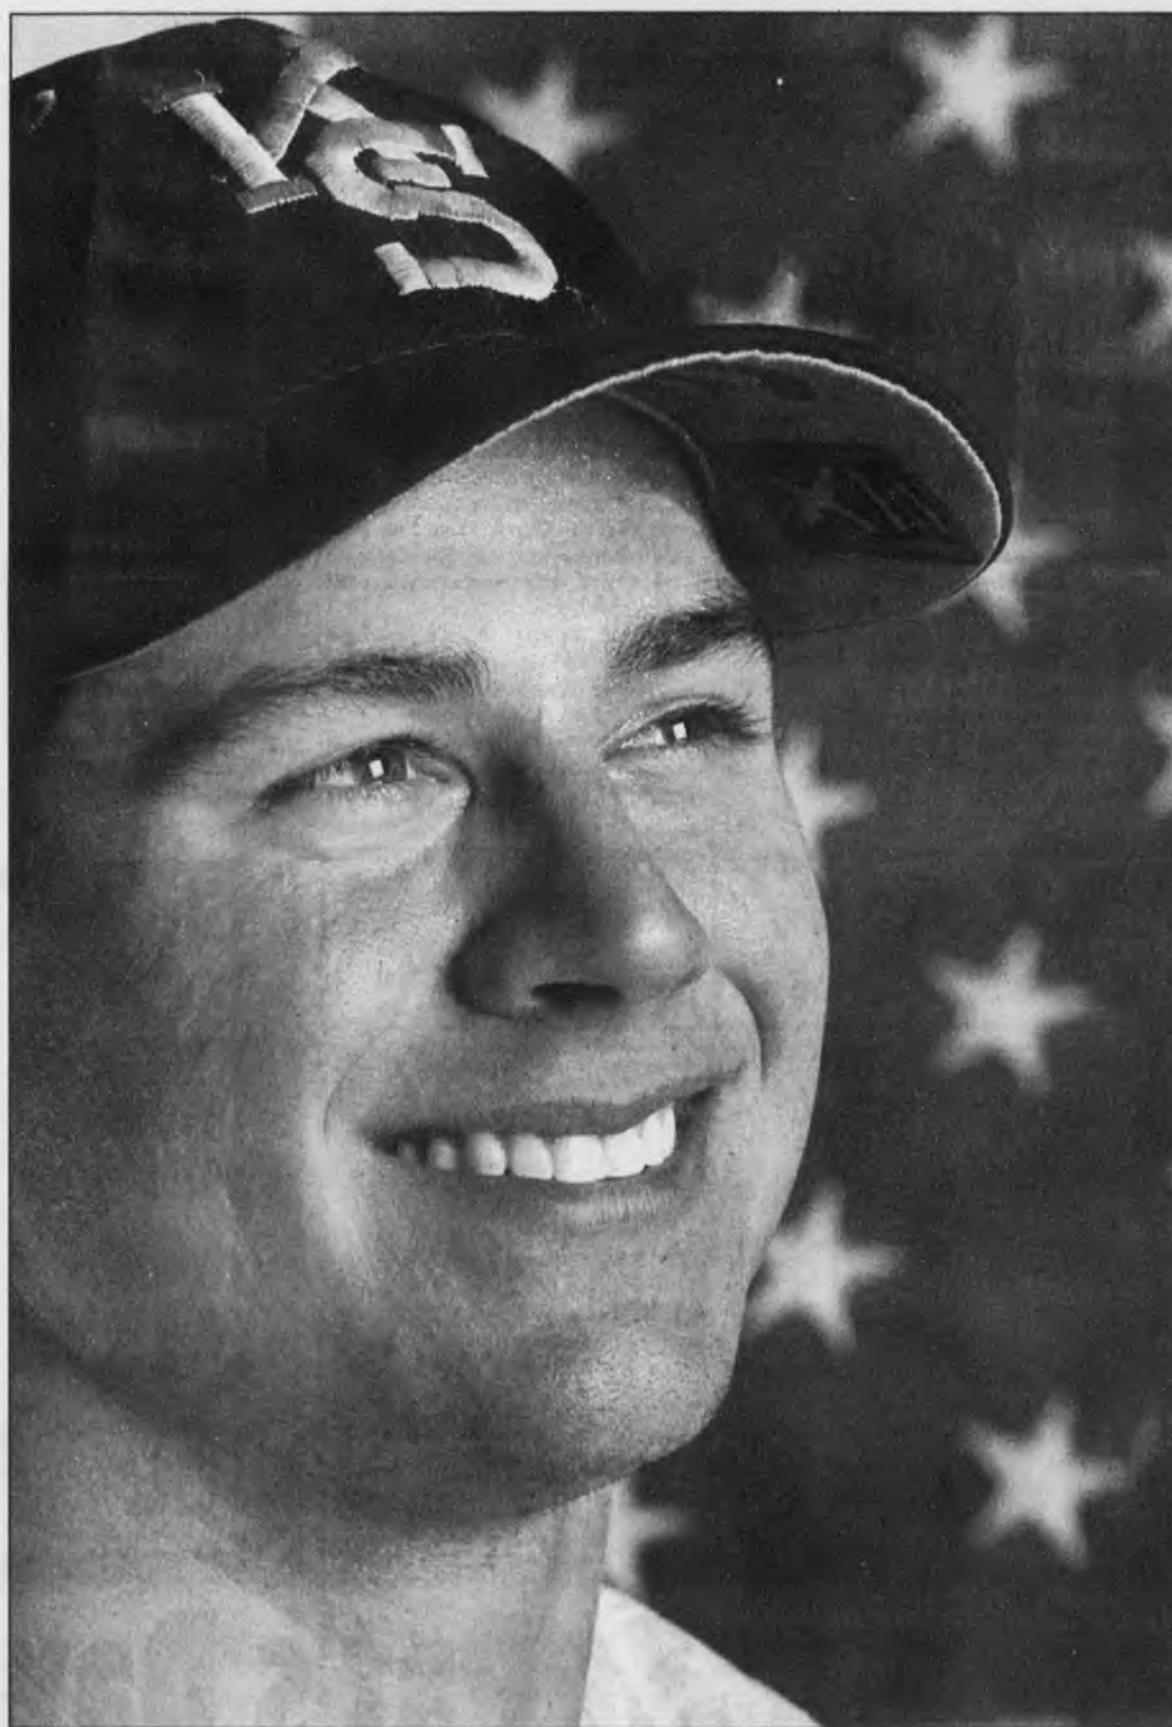

Bietau gave the majority of the Cats the day off Monday before they resume practice today.

Bietau said he believed this win was a start, but the team needs to build off it to qualify for nationals.

"In the big scheme of things this is a good win, but it's not a win that puts us at nationals," he said. "It gives the players an idea of how good our team might become."

ALL-AMERICAN

K-STATE BASEBALL PLAYER JOSH MARN, BORN ON THE UNITED STATES' BICENTENNIAL, IS IN THE MIDDLE OF A CAREER SEASON

BORN ON THE BICENTENNIAL OF THE UNITED STATES, WILDCAT THIRD-BASEMAN JOSH MARN SEEMS TO BE AN AUTOMATIC CHOICE FOR THE ALL-AMERICAN BASEBALL PLAYER. MARN GRADUATED FROM MANHATTAN HIGH SCHOOL, AND AFTER GOING TO SCHOOL AT TWO OTHER COLLEGES, HE'S BACK AT K-STATE TO PLAY FOR HIS HOMETOWN TEAM.

It's all there in black and white on his birth certificate: July 4, 1976.

An all-America baseball player to be?

Maybe.

However, K-State third baseman Josh Marn could care less.

"I guess it's the luck of God I was born on that day," Marn said. "I wasn't supposed to be born on that day. It's just another day. I really never pay attention to things like that."

That's just the way Marn is. He doesn't think about coincidences, or oddities, or how many home runs he needs to break a K-State record. It doesn't matter that 16 games into the 1998 season Marn has more home runs than he did the entire 54-game season a year ago.

Heck, leading K-State in eight statistical categories thus far in the year isn't even something that's prevalent in his mind.

"I really don't think about things like that," he said. "I don't think I am in a position to chase any records, but anyhow, that's not that important to me."

What is important to Marn is finishing school. A marketing and management major, Marn is scheduled to graduate in a year. Sure, he'd love to go on and play baseball, but this is his senior year, and all he really wants to do is play to his potential and have fun.

"This will probably be one of my last years playing baseball so I just want to have fun," he said. "I don't worry about the draft or professional baseball or whatever. I'm here playing baseball for Kansas State and that's all I concentrate on."

Baseball isn't even his first love. Football is. Upon graduation from Manhattan High School, Marn enrolled at Coffeyville Community College where he played strong safety on the football team. However, he tore his anterior cruciate ligament in his knee and was forced to have reconstructive surgery and exit the football field in a hurry.

"Football was the love of my life. That's what I wanted to play out of high school," he said. "After I had surgery I aimed all my attitudes and strengths toward baseball, and I think that helped me concentrate on becoming a better baseball player."

After Coffeyville, Marn transferred to Westmar University in Iowa where he earned second-team all-South Dakota-Iowa Conference honors as a designated hitter.

Marn wanted competition that would challenge him more, though. In 1997, Marn came back to Manhattan and walked on with the K-State baseball team.

"I guess I'm a hometown boy," he said. "I was looking for the best competition to play against after I left Westmar, and I found it in the Big 12. I was able to walk on with K-State and here I am."

In just a little more than a year Marn has already had an effect on head coach Mike Clark. With Marn being one of eight seniors on the team this year, Clark said he looks for Marn to be a center of stability for the team.

"He's done a nice job of being a cornerstone for us, a rock that we can fall back on," Clark said. "He's a good leader for us. He goes out every day in practice and works hard and works on his game and gets every bit of concentration he can out of each day. He's done a good job for us so far and hopefully he will continue to do well as the season goes on."

Marn is content with being labeled the hard-working type. After all, that's the way he was raised.

"It's in my blood, I guess. That's the way my dad was, too," Marn said. "I know I have to try harder than the next guy, and I love competing. I hate losing and that's why I fuel all my efforts toward winning."

It's that attitude that has fueled Marn's offensive prowess this year. Through 18 games, Marn leads the team in home runs, RBIs, runs scored and slugging percentage, just to name a few. However, Marn said he thinks he is still slacking.

"I think I can do a lot better," Marn said. "I have left a lot of guys on base this year. Hopefully I can pick my game up offensively a bit to where we can get some more wins this season and finish high in the conference."

It's the Big 12 Conference where Marn has found his niche.

"This is one of the elite conferences in baseball," Marn said. "I think I have held my own at this level and if I continue to do that and compete hard, then I get better and better."

But even that attitude hasn't made Marn an all-American.

Cats bring back mixed results from NCAA Championships

JOEL WHITE
Kansas State Collegian

Friday the 13th stuck the K-State track team with a multitude of bad luck.

The misfortune started as the Wildcats' Renetta Seiler entered Friday's NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships weight-throw competition. She said she sensed she would need a personal record to take the gold.

Seiler threw a personal record of 69-2 1/2, but it was not enough to beat South Carolina's Lisa Misipeka, who edged her by 1-2 3/4.

"Overall, I was pleased with how I threw," Seiler said. "I was a little slow in the ring, but I was happy with the distance. My main goal was to PR."

Seiler's only two losses of the indoor season came to Misipeka, who defeated her in the NCAA Championships and the Frank Seivigne Husker Invitational — on the Friday the 13th in February.

The misfortunes continued for the Wildcats.

Vanitta Kinard ended her career at K-State in a painful fashion with a seventh-place finish in the triple jump and 20th in the long jump. She leaped 43-1 3/4 in the triple jump and 18-11 1/4 inches in the long jump. Kinard had a severely injured nerve in the bottom of her left foot.

I'M DOWN ON MYSELF, BUT I DON'T THINK ANYBODY COULD HAVE JUMPED AS GOOD AS I DID ON AN INJURED FOOT.

VANITTA KINARD
K-State long and triple jumper

During the preliminary round of the triple jump, a large fluid-filled bump formed on the bottom of Kinard's foot, and eventually her arch fell, making her flat-footed. She iced her foot between jumps.

"It was like I had a marble on the bottom of my foot," Kinard said.

Considering the circumstances, Kinard, who never had lost to anyone who placed second through sixth in the triple jump, said she could not be disappointed with her performance.

"I'm down on myself, but I don't think anybody could have jumped as good as I did on an injured foot," she said.

The two other K-State women in the meet, Emily Diederich, who competed in the 800-meter run, and Anna Whitham, who competed in the weight throw, did not advance to the finals.

The Trackwire rankings predicted a 14th-place finish for the K-State men, but none of the five Wildcat men scored points for the team.

The Wildcats' high-jump qualifiers, Nathan Leeper, Attila Zsivoczky and Charles Burney, each entered the event in the nation's top 10.

However, none of the three managed to place higher than 12th in the competition.

Leeper was the Wildcat men's highest finisher.

He jumped 7-1 1/2 to finish in 12th place. Zsivoczky matched that height, finishing in 13th place. Burney cleared 6-10 1/4 to fall in the 15th spot.

Keith Black and Randy Melbourne, the Wildcats' 400-meter competitors, both failed to advance to the finals.

Karate club helps kick start month with performance

BRENNAL TALLEY
Kansas State Collegian

Union Courtyard looked like a scene from the '80s flick "The Karate Kid" Monday afternoon.

The KSU Karate Club demonstrated several techniques and forms used to determine promotion into a higher rank.

White, brown and black belts demonstrated their knowledge to promote Asian-American Awareness Month.

"We're pretty traditional to Japanese theories," said Jimmy Truett, senior in graphic design and one instructor for the club.

Truett said the club studies what is known as Goju-Ryu Karate-do style, which originated in Okinawa, Japan. The group meets in Ahearn Field House three times a week, and, unlike judo, it is unaccredited, so anyone can get involved.

The white belts, in the traditional uniform called a gi, performed several forms, including Tandokukata Dai-ichi and Kiso Kumite Shodan, two forms developed as a part of karate's structured testing, said Charlene Gibson, K-State alumna and branch master of the club.

"The brown belts do the Black-Seinchi, an individual choreographed form like in the end of 'Karate Kid Part 3.' It's a traditional kata," Gibson said.

After the white belts demonstrated techniques of free form and retaliation, brown belts displaying quicker and more complicated movements took over the floor.

Jeff Tripe, graduate student in fisheries and wildlife biology, said the forms were definitely cleaner as they went up in belts.

"The forms are important, but there definitely should have been some free sparring," Tripe said.

Tripe attended the performance during lunch with Travis Horton, also a graduate student in fisheries and wildlife biology.

Both were previously involved in martial arts — specifically, tae kwon do and kung fu.

"Kung fu is a stream of soft techniques like pressure points and grappling, and I think tae kwon do has hard movements versus karate's soft movements," Horton said.

In their martial arts classes, both said they learned about Asian masters and how kung fu and tae kwon do progressed through history.

Part of this historical perspective involved one of the most noticeable aspects of the performance. The grunts heard by students passing by are shouted as each individual blocks and jabs the other and are called the kiai, a vowel sound yelled out for breathing, related to energy exerted from the body.

"For philosophical reasons, it boosts self-confidence. It means 'steal the mind,'" said Gibson, who concluded the show with her own form called Saifa Tensho, which focused on breathing and movement, blocking out all distractions.

Army jury demotes, reprimands McKinney for obstruction in sexual-misconduct case

ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT BELVOIR, Va. — An Army jury spared Sgt. Maj. Gene McKinney a prison sentence Monday and instead reprimanded him and demoted him one rank for obstruction of justice in the sexual-misconduct case against him.

McKinney, once the Army's highest-ranking enlistee, could have gotten up to five years in prison and a dishonorable discharge.

He was demoted to master sergeant. The sentence was imposed by the same jury of six men and two women that cleared him of 18 of 19 counts Friday, including all charges that he pressured six military women for sex.

McKinney, 47, was convicted of obstruction for encouraging one of his accusers to lie to Army investigators. The telephone conversation had been secretly recorded and was played for the jury at his court-martial.

As the sentence was imposed, McKinney stood at attention and showed no emotion. His wife, Wilhemina, sat stoically, directly behind him.

In the recording, which was replayed during the sentencing hearing, McKinney is heard telling Staff Sgt. Christine Fetrow, "Just tell them that we talked. ... No inappropriateness at all, just that we talked."

Fetrow testified that McKinney pursued her for sex for more than two years. She said that in the call, he was urging her to lie. McKinney testified he was merely encouraging her to tell the truth.

Four of McKinney's six accusers sat next to one another in the courtroom, leaning forward — stone-faced — in their chairs.

Fetrow was among six women who testified that McKinney abused his position as sergeant major of the Army to grope or crudely pressure them for sex. Fetrow's accusations accounted for 10 of the 19 charges against McKinney.

In a court-martial, the jury, not the judge, imposes the sentence.

Senior military leaders have the option of reducing a sentence later, but not making it harsher.

The Army's lead prosecutor, Lt. Col. Michael Child, had asked the jury to sentence McKinney to six months in prison and a reduction to the lowest rank, buck private. He did not ask for a dishonorable discharge.

"The military justice system is with us to ensure discipline and rightful conduct from the lowest-ranking soldier to the highest-ranking soldier," Child told the jury. "The accused showed contempt for our system."

McKinney was removed from the powerful post after his first accuser, Sgt. Maj. Brenda Hoster, made her allegations public in February 1997.

Had he been convicted on all counts, McKinney could have gotten 55 1/2 years in prison.

His attorney Charles Gittins told the jury McKinney and his wife have suffered in the year since the accusations were made public and that imprisoning McKinney and reducing his rank would be overkill.

McKinney, looking relaxed, asked the jury to consider nearly three decades of service and allow him to retire with honor.

As he left the witness stand, McKinney glared at five of his accusers. Fetrow raised her eyebrows and dropped her jaw in disbelief when she caught his glare.

Jewish leaders criticize Vatican apology

ASSOCIATED PRESS

VATICAN CITY — In a long-awaited document that Jewish leaders immediately criticized, the Vatican expressed remorse Monday for the cowardice of some Christians during the Holocaust but defended the actions of the wartime pope.

The Vatican's version of the Roman Catholic Church's role during World War II, coming in a statement promised by Pope John Paul II a decade ago, singled out Pope Pius XII for praise as a wise diplomat.

He long has been criticized for failing to speak out forcefully against Nazi persecution.

"It is too little, too late," Meir Lau, Israel's chief rabbi and a Holocaust survivor, said in Tel Aviv.

"I have no doubt that the church did not do everything it could have to save people. ... His (Pius XII's) silence cost millions of human lives."

In recent years, bishops in several European countries have apologized on behalf of their churches for not having done enough to fight the Nazis, and there were expectations that John Paul would use the document to apologize for the Catholic church as an institution.

In a preface, the pope, who has made improving relations with Jews a cornerstone of his papacy, expressed hope that the document "will indeed help to heal the wounds of past misunderstandings and injustices."

The document is titled "We Remember: A Reflection on the Shoah (Holocaust)."

It "asks our Jewish friends to hear us with an open heart," said Cardinal Edward I.

Cassidy, whose Commission for Religious Relations with the Jews produced the work.

But many Jews had hoped to hear more, especially after the 10-year wait.

"I'm disappointed in it," said Abraham Foxman, national director of the Anti-Defamation League.

"If this had been the beginning of a historical process of dealing with the issue, it's one thing, but this is the conclusion," Foxman said in New York.

In one of its principal points, the document said, "We deeply regret the errors and failures of those sons and daughters of the church."

"We cannot know how many Christians in countries occupied or ruled by the Nazi powers or their allies were horrified at the disappearance of their Jewish neighbors and yet were not strong enough to raise their voices in protest," the document said.

Without naming names, it took to task "governments of some Western countries of Christian tradition, including some in North and South America" for being "more than hesitant to open their borders to the persecuted Jews."

The document is "more than an apology. We feel we need to repent ... for those members of our church who failed" to do enough, Cassidy said.

Most of the criticism centered on the document's ringing defense of Pius XII and the wisdom of his diplomacy.

The document quoted Golda Meir, the late Israeli prime minister, as praising him for raising his voice "when fearful martyrdom came to our people."

It cited a 1939 Pius encyclical warning that an hour of darkness could result from Nazi theories that denied the unity of the human race.

Cassidy said 11 volumes of documents in the Vatican archives backed the commission's conclusions about Pius.

Rome's chief rabbi, Elio Toaff, who welcomed John Paul to his synagogue in 1986 in an unprecedented visit, disagreed, saying Pius XII was silent about what was happening to the Jews.

Freemen booted from trial

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BILLINGS, Mont. — Four anti-government Freemen arrested after an 81-day standoff with the FBI were ejected from a courtroom Monday as they cursed the judge and a prosecutor on the first day of their criminal trial.

Federal marshals had to drag three of the defendants in and out of the courtroom because they refused to walk and pushed the fourth in a wheelchair. Two defendants were allowed to remain at the defense table.

The six are among two dozen people charged in connection with the Freemen's two-year operation from their isolated farm compound in a remote area of eastern Montana.

One has been identified as being from Kansas.

The FBI said some 800 people from around the country took lessons at the rural stronghold on issuing the worthless liens and warrants the Freemen say are legal tender. People also heard lectures on what the Freemen claim as their legal principles, a hodgepodge of odds and ends from the Bible, the Constitution, the Magna Carta and the Uniform Commercial Code.

Members of the group deny that U.S. courts have any jurisdiction over them.

Monday's fireworks began even before prospective jurors were brought into the courtroom.

Federal marshals said the Freemen refused to change out of their jail coveralls or to leave their cells. Marshals forcibly changed the Freemen's clothes.

The trial is expected to last several weeks.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

CLASSIFIED AD WRITING TIPS

► List items or services first. Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Fraternities, sororities plan summer remodeling projects

► HOUSING PROJECTS TO USE FUNDS FROM ALUMNI, LOANS, DONATIONS FROM MEMBERS.

SARA MARTIN
Kansas State Collegian

Whether to make a good impression on potential new members or to simply better the quality of living, many greek houses are gearing up for summer renovations.

"Our house was built in the '50s and is really falling apart," said Brad Vanderweide, Delta Upsilon member and senior in construction science and management. "Everyone is getting really fed up with the maintenance now."

Delta Upsilon has planned one of the largest renovation projects of the summer, with costs expected to range from $1.5 to $1.9 million. Funding comes from alumni donations, members' pledges to contribute after graduation and a long-term loan.

Because of the need for increased capacity, Vanderweide explained that the parking lot behind the house is being moved to make room for a three-story, 2,200-foot addition to the rear of the house.

The addition will include a new dining room, kitchen and three-person rooms to increase capacity from 68 to 82 live-in members. Plans to remodel the rest of the house have been finalized for next year.

They will also remodel the basement to include a study room, computer room and bicycle storage to make the house more appealing.

"Rush will be so much easier with a brand new house," Vanderweide said of the project that is expected to be finished by next fall. "A nice living environment will make it easier to bring in more people."

FarmHouse president John Gaither, junior in agricultural economics, said the fraternity also has large-scale renovations scheduled for this summer and is expecting to see costs reach $1 million.

Plans include renovating all sleeping quarters, the study rooms, kitchen, living and dining rooms. Work will begin in May and be completed for the fall.

FarmHouse's Alumni Association has taken care of the fund raising and planning.

"This will be a great source of renewed pride in our house and in our alumni," Gaither said.

Pride in their house, as well as a jump to the '90s, are reasons Theta Xi president Chad Knudson, junior in electrical engineering, is looking forward to the summer project.

"Now it looks good, but it's been so long since it's been renovated on the inside," Knudson said. "It kind of looks like we're stuck in the '50s or '60s. It will be nice to actually be more modern."

However, the fraternity modernizing the most is Phi Delta Theta. Earlier this year, it sold its residence to Delta Chi and plans to have a new house built for fall 1999.

"THIS WILL BE A GREAT SOURCE OF RENEWED PRIDE IN OUR HOUSE AND IN OUR ALUMNI."

JOHN GAITHER
FarmHouse president

Phi Delta Theta president Joe Kordalski, junior in social work, said an existing four-bedroom house on a suitable lot was donated by an alumnus to use for the construction of the house.

This annex is being renovated, and a few members will live there during the construction of the multi-million-dollar house, while the remaining members will spend the year off-campus. The annex will also be used for fraternity meetings.

"Our house is very old," Kordalski said. "It's fine structurally, but after being lived in for 60 years it's pretty worn out. Since we had the property and the annex, and someone was interested in the house, it was the perfect time."

After gaining possession of the house in late May, Delta Chi will be making cosmetic renovations to the property, with plans to move in the fall semester.

Greek houses to get renovations

The following fraternities and sororities are doing or planning to do renovations soon:

Acacia

Remodeled sleeping dorms last June. This summer the kitchen will be remodeled and a computer room added.

Alpha Chi Omega

Plans to expand the formal living room and turn it into the recreation room. The existing recreation room will become the formal living room. The dining area will be expanded, and several walls will be knocked out to open up the entryway.

Alpha Xi Delta

Recently remodeled the kitchen and dining rooms. Future renovations are also planned.

Beta Theta Pi

Last summer the top two floors were gutted, all rooms were remodeled, sheet rock was installed, and central heat and air were added. This summer or the following summer, an addition to the house will be constructed that will include a new study room, living area and sleeping areas.

Delta Chi

Will make cosmetic renovations to its recently purchased house.

Delta Tau Delta

Plans for the year 2000 include a small addition to the back of the house, that will include a chapter room, recreation room, dining area and kitchen. There are plans to gut the entire house, expand the entryway and add a front porch.

Delta Upsilon

The existing parking lot will be moved, and a 2,200-square-foot addition including a dining room, kitchen and three-person rooms will be added. The basement will be remodeled to include a study room, computer room and bicycle storage. The rest of the house will be remodeled in two years.

FarmHouse

This summer all the sleeping quarters, study rooms, kitchen, living and dining rooms will be remodeled.

Gamma Phi Beta

Over Winter break, renovations were completed on the basement to change rooms into sleeping dorms.

Kappa Sigma

Complete renovation of the dining room, including wallpaper, carpeting, tiling and furnishings will be done.

Lambda Chi Alpha

In the next few years, the entire house will be gutted, and wall structures and doorways will be added.

Phi Delta Theta

Renovate existing annex to live in while a new house is being constructed.

Phi Gamma Delta

Plans should be approved this Saturday to add another floor to the top of the house to include two-person rooms. Central air and a pitched roof may also be added.

Pi Kappa Alpha

In the last semester, the pledge dorm and the dining room have been remodeled. Work is being done to expand the recreation room to include a TV room and paint the study room. A bike storage room will also be built.

Pi Kappa Phi

Work is being done on the basement, including expanding a hallway, splitting rooms and adding a second entryway to the study room. The exterior may be painted this summer.

Sigma Alpha Epsilon

This summer, electrical wiring and plumbing will be worked on. Future plans include enlarging the dining room, reworking the formal living room and sleeping rooms, and adding a new house mother's quarters, presidential suite and senior rooms.

Sigma Chi

In summer 1996, a study room, central air and carpeting were added.

Sigma Kappa

New carpet and tile was installed over Winter break. Lighting will be redone this summer.

Sigma Nu

Expansion of the driveway and parking lot.

Theta Xi

This summer, the living room, conference room and entryway will be redone. Marble and wood floors, lighting systems, and exterior accent lights will be added. A new roof will be added.

Sorority raising $35,000 for Habitat for Humanity

BARBARA HOLLINGSWORTH
Kansas State Collegian

Twenty-two greek houses missed a meal to help build a home Monday night.

Pi Beta Phi's K-State chapter is raising $35,000 to build Manhattan's fifth Habitat for Humanity home. The fund raising began with the miss-a-meal program.

"They just won't eat at the house," said Lauren Tucker, junior in marketing who spoke to houses about the event. "The house won't provide a meal for them, so the money they would have spent on that meal will go to Habitat for Humanity."

Members expected to raise $1,000 to $3,000 with the miss-a-meal, said Aimee Jackson, co-chair for the fund raising and senior in interior design.

"Order of Omega holds a miss-a-meal, and we thought that would be a good way to raise money," Jackson said. "Then we started talking to our house mom to see how much money it would be to miss a meal and found it would be a pretty big sum."

The house will be one of 205 Oprah houses — a concept that began in the fall when Oprah Winfrey challenged viewers to build with Habitat for the Oprah Angel Network.

What do we think?

The Collegian editorial board commends this philanthropy. See Page 4

"Basically we just really got inspired by watching Oprah one day," Jackson said.

"We were really interested just because three of four homes that have been built have gone to single mothers, and we thought as a women's organization it would be really great to help these women."

When they approached Manhattan's Habitat for Humanity chapter, the president hadn't heard about the program yet.

"They had come in before I even received the application from Habitat for Humanity International to apply for one of the Oprah houses," said chapter president Marcia Schuley, who is also associate director of Career and Employment Services.

Already having financial sponsors helped the Pi Phi get the house, Schuley said, but the Pi Phi chapter is not the typical sponsor. She said most sponsors are large businesses.

"I've never seen people with more enthusiasm, so I'm putting on them," Schuley said. "I know they had a chapter vote, and there was 100-percent support for it."

While fund-raising plans for the remainder of the semester aren't definite, Jackson said the Pi Phi hope to raise all the money by the end of May. They plan to mail letters to friends and family asking for donations, have a miniature golf tournament in April and have a philanthropy with Theta Xi fraternity.

"I know in the next few weeks we'll be out in the community sitting in front of Dillons and Wal-Mart," Tucker said. "Every contribution helps, even if it's just a few cents."

Ground breaking for the house is 2 p.m. April 19. The house will go to a family of six.

"We did it to benefit the families," Jackson said. "I think it's just doing a good thing for someone else that makes a difference."

But it won't be just the chapter making the difference, Schuley said.

"I think Pi Beta Phi is providing the leadership," she said, "but it's a whole K-State effort."

Headaches might trigger complications

LINDSEY FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

Headaches can be a hassle, whether the cause is genetic, emotional or stress-related.

According to the American Council for Headache Education, whose World Wide Web site is at achenet.org/understand.htm, about 90 percent of men and 95 percent of women have had at least one headache during the past year.

Nanda Kumar, neurologist at Manhattan Medical Center, said people should be alarmed about headaches the first time they are severe.

"The concern we have at the time is that they have something abnormal in the brain," he said.

Kumar identified the basic categories of headaches and symptoms.

He said there were a lot of causes for headaches, but the most serious is called a Subarachnoid, or the rupture of an aneurysm, which causes bleeding in the brain.

"People can have periodic headaches, called a migraine headache," Kumar said. "Migraines can be of different varieties."

According to the National Headache Foundation, migraines can be hereditary. If both parents have them, there is a 75-percent chance their children will have them.

The foundation also said recent research has proven migraines do have physical causes and that sufferers can be affected by diet, stress, menstruation and environmental changes.

Kumar said common characteristics associated with migraine sufferers include flashes of light, tunnel vision, light sensitivity, nausea, vomiting or even blindness.

"Another variety of migraine is a complicated migraine," he said. "If it's a migraine of this sort, then it can paralyze one side of the body. You'll find that it's very similar to a stroke."

Kumar said lighter, more common headaches, called tension headaches, cause aches in the area where the muscles of the head and neck meet.

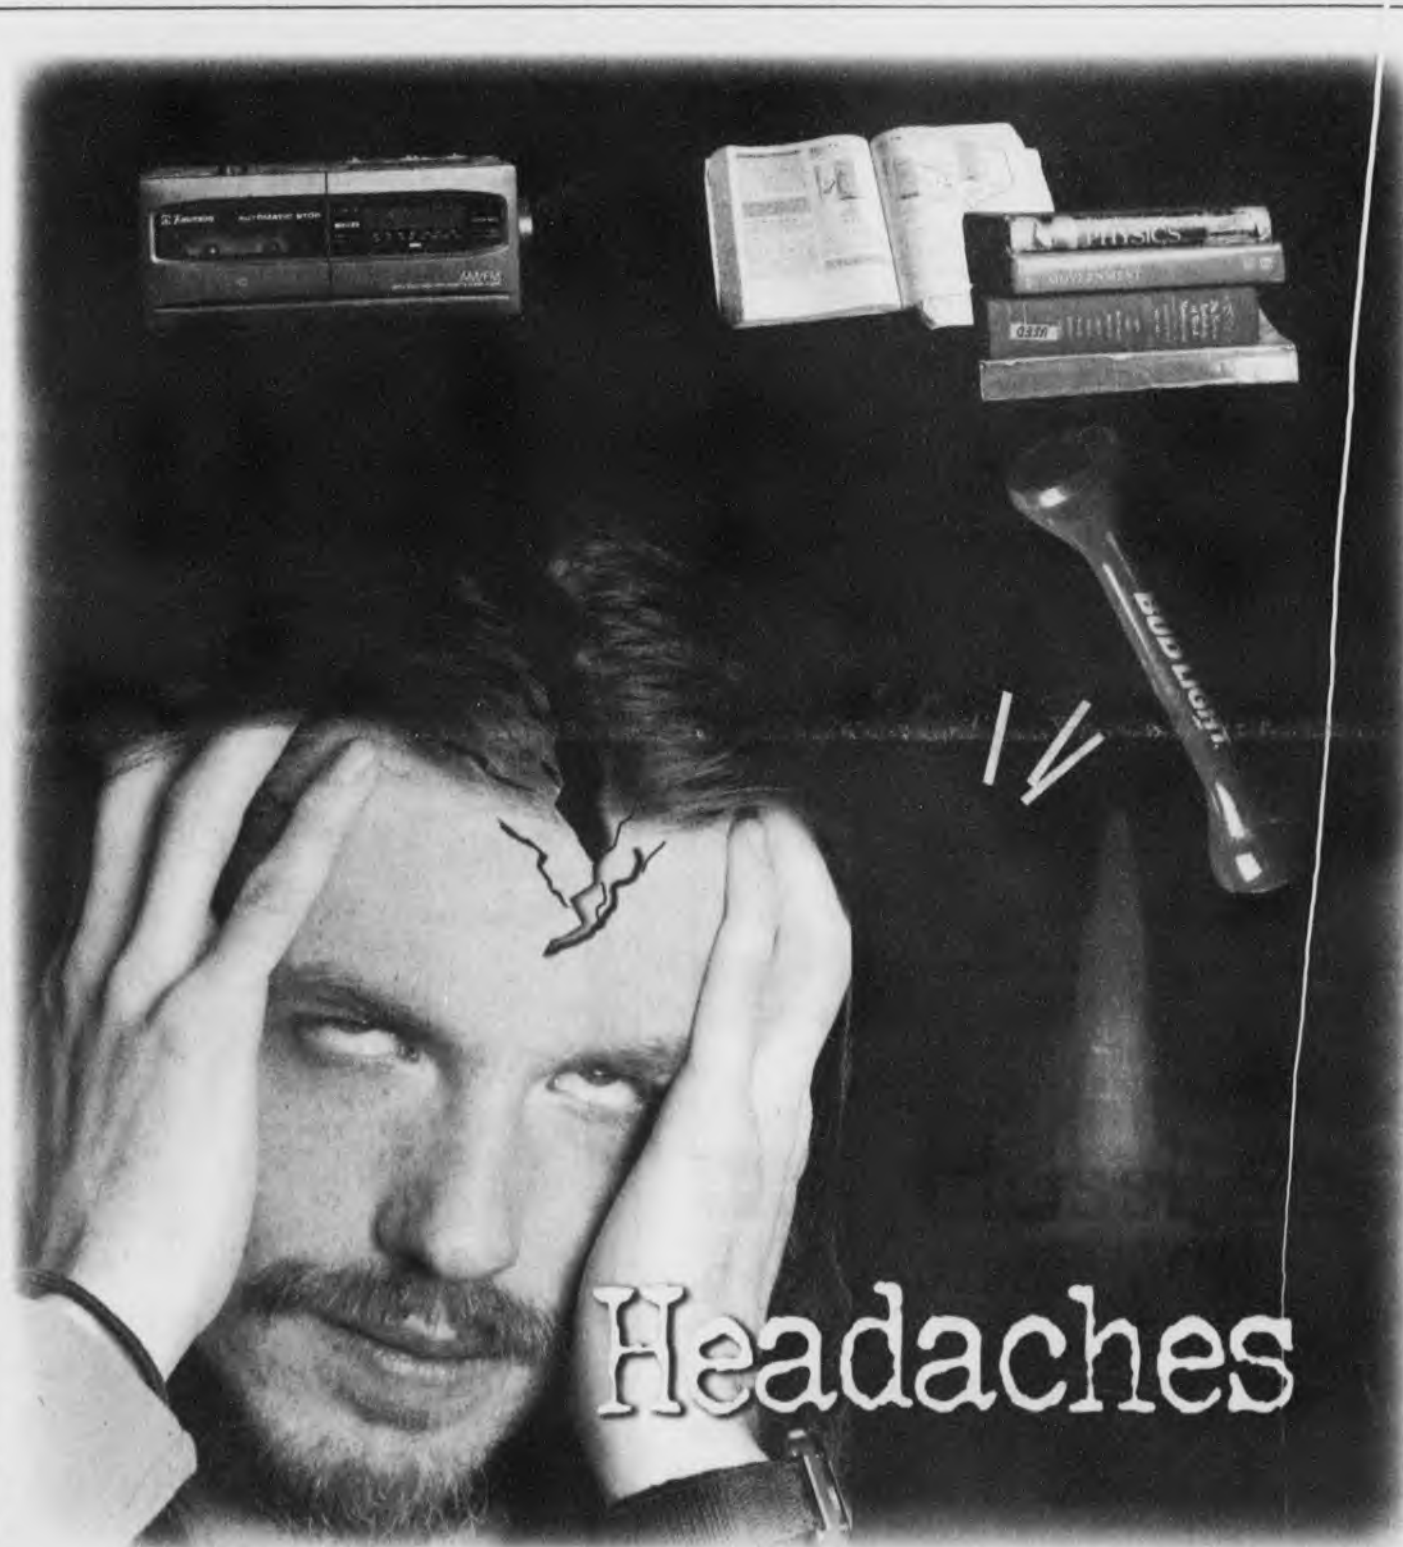

The textbook of Primary Care Medicine describes how tension headaches can be caused by physical and emotional pressures, leading to pressure on the head. The two types of tension headache are those occurring on an episodic basis and those that occur daily.

"Tension headaches can be caused by a muscle over-stimulation, whether you're sitting or sleeping," said Debra Doubek, family practitioner at Mercy Health Center on Sunset Avenue.

Doubek said there is a third kind of headache called the cluster. Certain foods, odors, stress or even a change in barometric pressure can cause these headaches.

According to the American Council for Headache Education, cluster headaches are severe, but have a brief attack. A history of heavy smoking and alcohol use often can trigger the attacks.

Doubek said, "If you experience any of these headache symptoms, and they increase in frequency or intensity, you should consult a doctor."

Medication available to treat various headaches

LINDSEY FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

For headache sufferers, repeated headaches can make life difficult, sometimes unbearable. Treating migraine, tension and cluster headaches with medicine can help manage them.

"Headaches are serious when they no longer allow people to go on with their daily lives," said Theresa Crubel, director of the occupational health program at Mercy Health Center on College Avenue.

"Patients usually want to take narcotics for their headache," she said. "Narcotics are effective, but they don't prevent headaches from reoccurring. It doesn't have a resolve."

Crubel said for some people, narcotics are the only way they find relief.

"The type of medication used for the treatment depends on the cause of the headache," Nanda Kumar, neurologist at Manhattan Medical Center, said.

Kumar said if the diagnosis is a migraine or cluster headache, effective prescription drugs are Imitrex and Zomig.

For the common headache, he suggested over-the-counter medicines, such as ibuprofen, acetaminophen and aspirin.

"There are many headaches like migraine or cluster headaches that can be treated effectively," he said, "so people don't have to suffer from the headaches."

Kumar said if people have headaches for a long time and no causes are found when they investigate the problem with a doctor, then it is most likely a small headache that can be helped with nonprescription drugs.

Doubek said when headache conditions become too severe, a doctor should be consulted.

Lying down and resting can help get rid of tension headaches caused by stress, Doubek said.

"A healthy diet and regular exercise can help headaches," Doubek said. "Daily headaches can be eliminated with stress techniques, such as relaxing, whether a person reads, does yoga or takes a walk."

Book sale to generate Hale funds

SHELLY SLATIER
Kansas State Collegian

It's time for spring cleaning, and all those books in the closet collecting dust can be put to good use. The spring book sale, sponsored by the Friends of the Library, provides literature at cheap prices and raises money for Hale Library.

Karen McCulloh, Friends of the Library secretary, said the sale is April 4-7 on the second floor of the library during operating hours.

"Anybody can buy the books," she said. "Since it is open house weekend, we are hoping many people will walk through and buy books."

McCulloh said the money raised from the book sale will go directly to the library and usually amounts to $5,000. All hard-back books will be $2, paperback books $1 and fiction paperbacks are 50 cents. On the last day of the sale books are sold for $1 a bag.

She said some things the group wants to buy for the library include atlases, dictionaries, map stands and index tables.

"The Friends like to buy one-time purchases for the library. We don't support long-term projects," McCulloh said.

Donation barrels are in the lobby of the library and both Manhattan Dillons. Book collecting will go until April 3.

"We get the books almost solely from donations," McCulloh said. "We get them all year from people, and the Student Union Bookstore also gives us used textbooks they don't sell anymore."

There will be a variety of books for sale. McCulloh said they will have novels, specialty books, cookbooks, children's books and coffee-table books.

"It's the luck of the draw," she said. "We never know exactly what we are going to have. It just depends on what people donate."

Mary Griffith, Friends of the Library president, said she will help set up for the sale and help sell the books. She said many other people are helping with the sale.

The Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity is assisting with the book sale. Chad Pike, junior in accounting and Pi Kappa Alpha community service chairman, said the house is helping for community service.

"We're picking up the books donated at Dillons and taking them to the library every day," Pike said. "We are also going to help sell the books."

McCulloh said Friends of the Library has been around for about 20 years and has almost 400 members.

"It's basically a support system for the library," she said. "While we raise money, we also lobby for support of the library."

McCulloh said Friends of the Library leveraged $750,000 in the past five years. It has a membership drive, a fall gala and a book sale to raise money.

"You can't underestimate how valuable a friends association can be," McCulloh said.

Yale professor to give speech on effects of insect manipulation on its population

A Yale University professor will give a seminar to K-State on Friday on how manipulation of insects could control the insect population based on his 10-year study.

Dr. Scott O'Neill, associate professor at Yale University's School of Medicine, will give a presentation titled "Wolbachia infections of arthropods: Evolutionary and applied aspects."

O'Neill said he will use basic science to describe his studies.

O'Neill said he would give just one seminar at K-State. O'Neill's speech is sponsored by the K-State Entomology Club.

"Each year the student department gives names for potential speakers, and then we vote on it," Bob Bowling, extension assistant in entomology, said. "We had nine or 10 excellent people to choose from, and he won the close vote."

O'Neill's research includes the use of mosquitoes.

"O'Neill is working on the use of bacteria to control insects," Srinivas Kambhampati, assistant professor of entomology, said. "Some insects have highly specialized bacteria that live in the insect's cell, and he takes the bacteria and puts whatever genes in them and then puts the gene back into the insect."

Students, faculty and staff are invited to attend the seminar in Weber 123. Refreshments will be served before the seminar.

Attorney general does not offer apology for comments about death penalty bill

TOPEKA — In a rebuke of Attorney General Carla Stovall's criticism of how the House handled a bill to expand the death penalty, lawmakers Tuesday suggested she owed the chamber an apology.

But Stovall spokeswoman Mary Horsch said her boss sees no need to apologize for saying the amended bill was so flawed it could virtually eliminate the state's death penalty.

"She stands by what she said at the news conference," Horsch said. "Her concern was directed the amendment and the impact it would have on the death penalty."

The bill appears to be going nowhere in the Senate, where Judiciary Chairman Tim Emert said his committee won't consider the bill because only two of the 11 members wanted to bring it up.

"I see no sense in dragging people through these emotional issues if nothing is going to happen," said Emert, R-Independence, who opposes the death penalty.

Last week, Rep. Mike Farmer, who opposes capital punishment, amended the bill to say when a prosecutor plans to seek the death penalty, a judge would have a hearing.

The judge would decide — before evidence is presented at trial — whether the public would be better served by having the defendant serve life in prison if convicted.

Stovall, who supports the death penalty, didn't mention Farmer, R-Wichita, by name but called his amendment clandestine and suggested it would perpetrate a fraud.

The bill expanded the death penalty to include premeditated murder of any child younger than age 14. Such child murder now is a capital crime only if it occurs during a kidnapping or if a child has been kidnapped for sexual purposes.

According to Kansas law, the toughest penalty for a single crime, other than death, is 40 years in prison without parole.

On Tuesday, some House members said Stovall's comments were out of line and challenged Farmer's integrity. Farmer said his goal was to give judges an additional option in a death penalty case.

"There is no more honorable and honest person in this House. To attack his motives is an assault on the House," Rep. Tony Powell, R-Wichita, said.

"If the attorney general wants her agenda considered by the House, she needs to give the legislators and the House an apology," he said.

At one point, Farmer offered to an unrelated bill an amendment similar to one he added last week to the death penalty bill — and made a pointed reference about Stovall's comments.

"I offer this amendment in front of you so it's not clandestine," Farmer said. "This isn't clandestine. I'm not trying to perpetuate a fraud."

The amendment, which was adopted, would add another mitigating circumstance for a jury to consider — whether imprisonment would be sufficient to protect society from the defendant.

Farmer's amendment adds to the list of what a jury can consider in deciding whether to impose the death penalty after a person is found guilty of capital murder.

Another who criticized Stovall was Rep. Doug Mays, R-Topeka, who sponsored the expanded death penalty bill.

"I was surprised and disappointed with the attorney general's remarks," Mays said. "I don't believe this is a clandestine organization, and I don't believe we're in the business of perpetuating frauds."

For his part, Farmer said he doesn't want an apology from Stovall, but added, "I thought her remarks were rather harsh."

After the rhetoric, House Speaker Tim Shallenburger struck a more moderate tone in talking to reporters.

"I think she may have been a little harsh. Whether she owes us an apology is for her to decide," said Shallenburger, R-Baxter Springs.

Asked if Stovall's various legislative proposals are in trouble in his chamber, Shallenburger said, "Oh, I don't think we'll retaliate."

Communities to receive federal aid funds to redevelop abandoned industrial sites

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Sixteen communities and the state of Rhode Island will receive a combined $28 million in federal aid to restore abandoned industrial sites as models for the Clinton administration's "Brownfields" community redevelopment program.

Vice President Al Gore announced the selections Tuesday in a White House conference call with community leaders.

Brownfields are moderately polluted pieces of land, usually in inner cities, where the contamination is not severe enough to qualify for the Environmental Protection Agency's superfund list of the highest priority cleanup sites.

"Across the nation, abandoned industrial properties are robbing communities and neighborhoods of the opportunity to share in the nation's economic progress," Gore said.

"This administration has taken action to help cities and communities clean up these Brownfields and enable them to serve as sources of economic vitality, of jobs and of community pride."

Kansas City, which will receive $2.5 million, is included in the 16 cities and communities to be part of the two-year assistance program.

The 16 areas selected are the first in the Clinton administration's Brownfields National Partnership, a two-year federal investment of $300 million for cleanup and redevelopment. It coordinates the resources of more than 15 federal agencies.

Previously, the problem of financing the revitalization of Brownfields was tackled largely through a patchwork of local efforts similar to welfare reforms that percolated for years in the states before Congress overhauled federal laws.

Dole visits Omaha to speak at convention, offer tips on success from political view

OMAHA, Neb. — Former Republican senator and presidential candidate Bob Dole took time out from his "thank-you tour" of Kansas to give 13,500 people here some tips about success.

But not before he brought the house down with laughter after appearing onstage — along with red, white and blue confetti, and fireworks — and saying, "Where were you when I needed you?"

A relaxed Dole told the audience at the Peter Lowe's Success 1998 convention that it was hard to be so close to Iowa and not be running for anything.

Dole told the audience he has had a lot of time to think since his loss to President Clinton in the 1996 presidential election.

"The most common question I'm asked is 'How does it feel to lose?'" Dole said. "In national elections, I haven't done so good. I've been called the wise man of no-win situations. It's a role I'll accept."

"Losing means at least you're in the race. The only failure is when you quit," Dole said.

Telefile provides alternate method for filing taxes

BARBARA HOLLINGSWORTH
Kansas State Collegian

Students can get their tax refunds faster this year with one phone call.

The Kansas Department of Revenue is offering Telefile for the second year. Telefile allows residents the opportunity to file taxes on the phone. The phone number for Telefile is (800) 260-6829.

"It's the easiest way to file," Sheila Walker, spokeswoman for the department, said. "Fill out that worksheet, call that 800 number and punch in your answers on your telephone keyboard."

Students who received Telefile booklets in the mail can automatically use the system. Others should check the department's Internet site at ink.org/public/kdor to see if they qualify.

Since Telefile opened Jan. 15, Walker said 45,000 people have filed — about 10 percent ahead of where it was at this point in 1997. Walker said she didn't know how many of those filers were students, but she said most students met Telefile's requirements.

"When I was in college I worked in the summer and part-time, so I would be considered a simple or short-term filer," she said. "These people fit the person who would fit the requirements for Telefile."

Scott Hammerschmidt, sophomore in electrical engineering who worked full-time during the summer and part-time fall semester, said Telefile made filing for taxes easier this year.

"I found it a lot easier than the K-40EZ form," said

Hammerschmidt, who filed about a week ago. "I'd find myself sitting down for 1 1/2 hours making sure I had everything right. With Telefile, I spent 20 minutes taking down all the information and 10 minutes punching it into the phone."

Telefile users also avoid having to complete calculations; the system does the math.

"It does the math after you enter your income and any other information it wants," Walker said. "It will dictate your refund or the tax due right on the phone."

"If you owe money to the state, the Telefile system will tell you exactly how much," she said. "If the state owes you money, we will just send the check."

Those refund checks will reach Telefile users faster than people who file through the mail, Walker said. By mail, it could take four to six weeks, but through Telefile, refunds arrive in about 10 days.

"Sometimes there can be delays with filing by mail. Maybe it gets lost in the mail, or maybe when we get it, the form wasn't completed correctly," Walker said. "It takes a while to get through the system like that. With Telefile, we realize the information instantly."

Telefile also gauges if users are satisfied. At the end of the phone call, filers take part in a survey. She said 98 percent said they would use the program again.

Taxpayers can call 24 hours a day until midnight on April 15 to use the program.

For Mitch Mobley, senior in history, the convenience will make Telefile his filing system of choice when he files his taxes this week.

"It might make it a lot simpler," Mobley said. "A lot of people procrastinate if they have to mail it in and fill out the forms rather than call it in and take care of it quickly."

WITH TELEFILE, I SPENT 20 MINUTES TAKING DOWN ALL THE INFORMATION AND 10 MINUTES PUNCHING IT INTO THE PHONE.

► The Internet is chock full of sites to help you finish your tax return before the April 15 deadline. Check out the following addresses:

irs.ustreas.gov — For information about income taxes, start with information straight from the horse's mouth. The official site of the Internal Revenue Service gives information about tax preparation and offers electronic versions of various forms.

taxweb.com — Taxweb is just that — a consumer-oriented Internet source for federal, state and local tax-related developments.

aboutwork.com/tax/ — This site offers comprehensive tax tips, news, forms and publication information.

ink.org/public/kdor — For official information on Kansas taxes, check out the official Web site for the Kansas Department of Revenue.

Helpful steps to file Kansas income taxes

• Obtain eligibility requirements, worksheets and instructions at www.ink.org/public/kdor. That information is also available in the 1997 income tax booklet, which can be picked up in the Union Courtyard, next to the Office of Student Activities and services.

• Fill in basic information on the worksheet.

• Call (800) 260-6829 and punch in the requested information. Callers should not hang up until they have received their confirmation numbers.

• Taxpayers can find out when their return will arrive by calling (800) 894-0318 a few days later.

• Refunds should arrive in about 10 days.

Sorority's philanthropy serves local community

The philanthropic actions of one sorority will pay off at the end of April when a family gets a new home.

Pi Beta Phi's K-State chapter has committed itself to raising a hefty sum to help build a home through Habitat For Humanity and Oprah's Angel Network.

The $35,000 being raised by Pi Phi's will place a family in a home sometime after April 19 when construction begins breaking ground.

Providing a home for a family of six from Manhattan is a fantastic example of students deciding to leave this community even better than they found it.

This fund-raising project requires a significant contribution of time and money from individual students, and for that they should be commended.

The Pi Phi's voted unanimously to initiate and follow through on this project although the majority of the other 205 Oprah Houses are sponsored by large businesses.

With a commitment so large, other students have an opportunity to get involved. Students can contribute to making this dream come true by watching for chances to help.

Students and those who have friends in Pi Phi's K-State chapter might be contacted to help and can give donations to help this project succeed.

However, the most prominent opportunity for students to donate to this cause will come in the next few weeks. Members of this sorority will be sitting in front of Dillons and Wal-Mart to gather financial donations.

Help out. Drop cash or any change you can spare when you're shopping at either location.

Remember, the contributions will not only help the Pi Phi reach their goal but will help build a home for a Manhattan family.

THE YEAR'S DUBIOUS ACHIEVEMENTS IN CAMPUS POLITICS

(Or why you never cared to vote in the past and why you won't be turning out this year to vote for Blondie and his sidekick Tommy Hilfiger)

VIEWPOINT

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Russell is a fifth-year senior in architectural engineering. You can send e-mail to Russell at rml@ksu.edu.

It's been a banner year for the K-State résumé mafia.

That dear special interest of Student Governing Association types and assorted campus do-gooders has accomplished its task of sucking the life out of student government. Among its stunning fêtes, the pièce de résistance was by far the incredible lack of candidate interest in the spring elections. Apparently, no one wants to join the most volatile and vicious student organization on campus, Student Senate.

I should feel sorry for Senate, as I was once a member back in 1995, but somehow that's just not possible. How can anyone feel sorry for a Senate that has come to ignore its past, to marginalize its own precedents and to mortgage its future.

Its membership mainly has been reduced to ax-grinding anti-intellectuals bent on some sort of ridiculous campus domination. Comically, as this column is being written, various mafioso are plotting pathetic retorts suggesting such silly notions as the student body president should have "po opinions" (reprinted without the permission of our dear student body vice president).

And so, in the tradition of Esquire magazine, I give you not my 1998 Best of the Elections Awards, but my 1998 Student Government Dubious Achievement Awards. Drum roll, please.

Best Last Grasp for Power: Aaron Otto, for refusing to die with dignity after last year's humiliating loss in the student body presidential election. Instead, Otto has tried successfully to turn the Senate Privilege Fee Committee into an Inquisition-esque council that virtually everyone loathes. Graduation in May means the end of an era. Break out the Korbels.

Runner-up Last Grasp for Power: Pat Carney, an on-again-off-again whipping boy for Otto — not only did he run the Union Program Council into the ground by losing $40,000 on a bad, disorganized Soul Asylum concert a few years ago, but also put his hands in every student group on campus. The past few years, he jumped around in Senate to be everything from parliamentarian to senator to unsuccessfully vying for Senate chair. I can think of 40,000 reasons he won't be running a large corporation in 10 years.

Look Before You Leap: The Board of Student Publications, but mainly Carlton Getz, Barry Flinchbaugh and Bill Feyerharm. The three musketeers of back-room campus politics, they can be roundly thanked for the Student Publications director firing/hiring debacle. One for all and all for one, as long as your worldview is as limited, petty and pathetic as theirs. Or is it, whatever Carlton wants, Carlton Getz?

Could You Talk Into My Hairdo, Monica?: Outgoing student body president Tim Riemann might not have been caught on tape, but who on campus didn't know he was a significant organizer for the 7 a.m. meeting to eliminate Student Pub's Ron Johnson. Unfortunately, that's nearly the only legacy he will leave us. Note to prez: Next time, stay up in Waters Hall with Flinchbaugh and forget playing junior Brownback.

It's a Left-wing/Moderate/Right-wing Conspiracy: Poor Rep. Jeff Peterson, R-Manhattan, seems to be the only elected official in Manhattan whose personal and financial life matters to anyone, particularly the moderate local press. OK, so he's not a student and just a former student body president, but when will people realize our generation can't hold a job and would rather live off mom and dad for as long as possible. You got a gripe? Find him a job!

He's Dreamy in a Tony Blair Kind of Way: Long live the white male power base of good old K-State, as every candidate for student body president was strictly Clintonian in style and Perotian in rhetoric.

If I have to listen to another oh-so-sensitive white male tell me why women's issues and campus safety are important, I'm going to jump off Hale Library. Sorority girls, unite! You alone have the power to stamp out the Greg Brady quotient in our presidents and elect a woman to clean SGA's political house. Or maybe our SGA leadership just reflects K-State's administrative leadership.

Turning Coal Into Diamonds: Who else thinks it's time to do away with Student Tribunal? This do-nothing judicial branch board rarely meets and when pressed with an important issue, takes more time than Strom Thurmond does to vote. I've got an idea, let's disband all irrelevant bureaucratic entities within SGA and sweep out all of the résumé mafioso. Oh, wait, what would be left?

El Niño Strikes the Heartland: Truthfully, the great blizzard of two weeks ago along with Oprah Winfrey's court win in Amarillo, Texas, were the first signs of the apocalypse. The second sign was SGA elections. The third and final sign? Hale Library will be fully funded. It looks like we have at least 300 more years before Judgment Day.

Alternative Activities to Voting: You could catch up on the latest movies before the Oscars on Monday. Delve into those architecture books you've been wanting to read to understand my other columns. Or perhaps get inebriated in an Aggieville bar.

No, those are all too easy. The true pissed-off-at-campus-politics nut case would probably just settle into the couch and watch Pam Grier whip some ass in "Coffy."

Protesters should set positive example, stop committing contradictory actions

VIEWPOINT

DAVID FAIRBANKS
David is a senior in electronic journalism. You can send e-mail to David at jollyd@ksu.edu.

Every day we hear, read and take part in discussions over what is right and what is wrong. In fact, that seems to be the underlying factor present in most modern-day disputes. As each of these disputes challenges the line between right and wrong, the fight just gets bigger and closure becomes impossible.

Let's start with abortion. I usually try to keep out of this fight because I'm convinced neither side can win. I mean, what's the use of getting in a fight if there will be no winner or loser?

Convincing someone else that abortion is right or wrong is about as easy as finding a parking spot on campus. First we have pro-lifers who rally around the belief that life starts at conception. Their platform is built on faith, morals and human decency. Now I'm not saying they're wrong, but I do have a few questions.

If they want to scream murder every five seconds and proclaim they preserve and protect life, then why does part of that same faction justify killing abortion doctors and workers? I mean, the last clinic bombing didn't even touch the parties it was meant for. The casualties? The blinding and scarring of a nurse and the death of an off-duty police officer. Didn't that fiasco completely undermine the entire belief that murder is wrong?

I know not all pro-lifers are raging homicidal lunatics. I realize that it's the radical few who give them a bad name. But back to the point at hand.

What happens when there's too much life? Without abortion, our numbers would rise to catastrophic levels. We may not see it as a threat here, but other countries have already reached their saturation limit. The more people our world has, the more food we need, the more land we need and the more resources we use. But as our numbers grow, so does our consumption, and without a control over the number of bodies present we'll eventually consume ourselves. To me, that doesn't sound like preserving life at all.

Now for the pro-choicers. I agree with what they say about having the right to choose without having Big Brother mandate what goes on in their bodies. But there's a flip side to that.

Sure, choice is good, but aren't they neglecting the wishes and wants of their future child? A choice that cancels out someone else's choices doesn't seem to be logical. Also, if they want to preach about having the responsibility of choosing what's right for them, then why don't they take precautions? I'm sorry, but taking the Pill, wearing a condom or seeing a family-planning counselor seems to be a little less stressful and a little less painful of a choice to make.

Sure, there are exceptions to this, like rape. But I'm talking about the times people don't think ahead and rely on abortion to bail them out of their self-induced trauma. That's just plain irresponsible.

All around, I can understand points on each side of the coin. Personally, I wouldn't condone my wife or girlfriend to get an abortion. But just because that is what is right for me doesn't mean the same goes for everyone else. When it comes to right and wrong, everyone has a different opinion. Who's to say which one is truly right?

Another fight that's impossible to win is the debate over the rights and wrongs of sexual orientation. This issue is completely different than that of abortion, because we're not dealing with death, and we're not dealing with choice. On one side we're dealing with overly proud, closed-minded jerks, and on the other side we're dealing with humans who want to be treated like humans.

How sexual orientation became such a controversial issue is way beyond me. The facts are that there are homosexuals and heterosexuals and in many cases bisexuals, just like there are white people and black people and red and brown and so on. Some people are born one way and some the other. Why chastise someone for what they are when they have no control over it?

So why, you may ask, do people fight about something like this? Because that's the way it's been forever. There's no way in hell to convince someone that homosexuality is really OK when they were brought up to believe that it's wrong. Why some parents choose to enslave their children's minds behind the bars of ignorance, I don't know.

My favorite example of ignorance in action is the recent court case involving the Boy Scouts of America.

It just makes me laugh when the organization talks about doing the right thing to preserve morality and liberty by keeping homosexuals out. It sounds to me like its morals and ideas of liberty aren't that far removed from plain stupidity.

Does it really think that the guy it kicked out was the only homosexual in the Boy Scouts? I mean, please, he's just one of probably countless numbers of gay boys in the scouts: gay boys that are Eagle Scouts, gay boys that will go on to do great things, gay boys that will some day lead this country. It just sucks that they have to live in fear of being excluded from such a character-building organization simply because of the way they were made.

The doctor who will deliver your first child might be gay. The researcher who discovers the cure for AIDS might have had an abortion. The professor who is currently preparing you for the outside world may be emphatically pro-life. And the dispatcher who answers your 911 call when your baby girl has something lodged in her throat may be bisexual and work part time as a receptionist at an abortion clinic. Live your life like you want, but don't expect everyone else to do the same, because it may be the people you don't see eye to eye with whom you'll have to depend on some day.

Presidential candidates angry about allegations of violations

Editor,

We would like an opportunity to get the truth out. Jim Boomer and I did not break any violation in regards to our T-shirt distribution, and we do not want concerned members of our student body thinking we did, considering the recent article in the Collegian.

This accusation first surfaced two weeks ago. The Elections Committee, the committee that governs our electoral process, decided our campaign did not violate any part of the election codes. This grievance has already been ruled unjustified.

Now, one week later, a conveniently timed appeal has been submitted against this ruling. Someone, for whatever reason, has decided to take the election into his own hands and bring this to our attention again, despite the decision already made by the committee. Someone who already knows that these accusations are false.

Someone who voluntarily submitted his allegations to the Collegian to make sure our names were smeared to the public. Someone who enjoys seeing other people suffer.

Things without remedy should go without regard. Boomer and I cannot change the past. We can only hope that the student body knows we have not violated any election code. The Elections Committee already decided that. If we broke these rules, do you really think that the Chris Van Tyle/John Stucky and Bret Glendening/Shayne Castelan campaigns would have endorsed the Greg Davis/Jim Boomer campaign?

We did not gain the support of these individuals by breaking the rules.

These individuals believe in true causes and doing things for the right reasons. Boomer and I refuse to back down because we know that we are in this for the right reasons.

Let the student voice be heard. Not one voice with a vendetta, but 20,000 voices that don't take lightly to false accusations stemming from a political fury. If we lose, we will walk away proud.

However, we hope that we walk away knowing that the student body has expressed its opinion and has not considered the fallacies of one unique individual in our opposition. We followed the campaign regulations to a precise "T."

We know that Tracey Mann and Andy Macklin would not be proud of a victory where the opposition was tarred and feathered by someone with absolutely no justification for these actions, except for his own personal benefit.

Please vote for the right reasons.

Greg Davis, student body presidential candidate

Grievance coverage biased; paper should remain neutral

Editor,

I was disappointed to pick up the Collegian Monday and read the headline story "Investigation looks into possible campaign violations." Why is it the Collegian, which should be providing the campus with factual news, so often presents the K-State community with the view of the Collegian staff?

In my mind, the opinions of one engineering senator do not make a news story. The idea of including such a story in the newspaper is ludicrous, much less as the headline story on the front page. What exactly did this story prove? With the obviously vague wording of election regulations, it would be an embarrassment to our school if sanctions were placed on the Greg Davis/Jim Boomer campaign. That the Collegian has chosen to make this incident into an issue is an extreme injustice to the hard work put forth by all candidates, and I am appalled that such irresponsible journalism could affect the outcome of this election.

Liberals' stance contradictory, throws hate at conservatives

Editor,

After a semester of listening to the local liberal group at K-State whine and cry, I've decided I've had enough. As a strong conservative woman and a Christian, I feel it is my job to say something. For all of you left-wing thinkers out there, I'm going to give you a taste of your own medicine.

All you ever do is whine and complain that we conservatives are nothing but a bunch of hate-filled people with only a single-minded view. It sounds like it's you who hate us. You say you are so open to other people and ideas — then why can't you be open to us? This is the way we choose to live, so accept it. You want us so badly to accept you — then do the same to us.

Well, I'm tired of it. I agree with everything Sam Sackett has to say. I too believe that homosexuality is wrong, and I sure wouldn't want my son to be led by a homosexual man. Accept it.

It is so typical that liberal thinkers always try to silence, run down and mock those people who don't think as they do. If my thinking sounds like I am from the '50s, it's because I feel those times embraced the morals and ethics to which I more closely relate.

I, as a conservative thinker, don't feel I must change my beliefs to suit you left-wing radicals. Deal with that. I feel it is less conforming to stick to my beliefs than it is to go along with the vocal liberal whiners who all follow each other like sheep.

Homosexuals can serve as positive role models for youth in Boy Scouts

Editor,

I am concerned about the column published Friday written by Sam Sackett, titled "Courts decision to allow homosexual scouts leaves it with black mark, bad deed for day."

The same day this column was published, I was attending a conference for the Kansas chapter of the National Association of Social Workers. Professional, licensed social workers and students of social work throughout the state of Kansas attended this conference. I find it unfortunate for K-State that members of NASW were exposed to this.

Although I do support Sackett's freedom to share his opinion, I am disappointed he allowed his homophobia to cloud his judgment in writing a column not based on interests or facts. What I was left with from Sackett's words was a man who gave an opinion based on his position as a conservative, not the interest of values and ethics for the tradition of Boy Scouts.

I was appalled by some of the statements Sackett made. For example, he wrote, "I have had enough of this balderdash. Homosexuals and other extreme leftist groups who want their lifestyles to be made known to young men just don't seem to understand that their twisted perception of sexuality isn't what everyone in this country wants for their children."

First of all, I do not see how a small part of an individual's identity has anything to do with where he or she stands on a political continuum or how Sackett can generalize gays as a group of people recruiting children for their cause. Secondly, issues of gay, lesbian or bisexual rights is not a matter of leftist groups trying to push some kind of agenda.

In his column, Sackett described the values of the Boy Scout tradition to be "trustworthy, loyal, helpful, friendly, courteous, kind, obedient, cheerful, thrifty, brave, clean and reverent." Nowhere in these values did I read heterosexual.

I do not understand how a gay man could not be capable of upholding this code of ethics. A gay man has the capability of being as courteous or kind as anyone else and have the same faith in a spiritual being.

Finally, I don't understand how the rights of Americans are being threatened. I am getting the impression that Sackett's concern is that children are being recruited to be gay or lesbian. I believe lack of knowledge and homophobia is the reason there is a fear that this will happen.

I would like to suggest further that Sackett perceives an agenda because of his own moral agenda as a conservative. Logically, I do not see how anyone would want America's children to subject themselves to oppression that not only threatens their jobs and their stability, but their lives. If anything, I see a means of support for adolescents who face these threats.

I fear that social workers across the state of Kansas will perceive K-State to be a homophobic university. This is unfortunate. My advice to Sackett is to think twice before writing such a column, and, even if it is your opinion, use critical thinking, judgment and facts to back your opinion.

Reader questions government control over moral lifestyles

Editor,

I thought America was the land of the free. However, after reading some opinions Monday, I am not so sure that is the mentality of Americans today. It seems people think the government can dictate to people what they stand for. In the past month, we have seen two instances of this — the Boy Scouts and the Professional Golf Association. Both have rules and regulations. These rules in one seem to "discriminate" against gays and in the other against the handicapped.

The question is whether the government should be allowed to change these rules that have been freely made. If individuals do not agree with the ideas of an organization, then they have the freedom to start their own organization with a whole other set of ideas. I ask this: What will happen when a girl wants to join the Boy Scouts or a boy the Girl Scouts? Will the government be called upon again to change guidelines so that these organizations do not exclude people because of their gender?

Take the case of fraternities and sororities. Fraternities were started first, but women did not force the fraternities to admit them; they started their own organization. Here's the bottom line: If you do not like something, start your own club with your own ideas. That is the freedom all have in America. However, do not force others to change to your ideas or standards. What kind of freedom do we have when the government sets the standard for the people?

I will be applying to dental school in the next two years, and there is the chance I will not make it in because it has certain requirements I must meet. Perhaps with this new American mentality, I will be able to force dental schools to accept my lower standards with the help of the government so I can get in. After all, I should be able to do what I want, and they should not be able to discriminate against me just because I am not as smart as they think I should be. Enough of that. Let's get back to reality.

If I do not get in, I will either have to change to fit their standards, or I will have to accept the fact that I will not be a dentist. Dental schools do not and should not change their academic standards, so why should others have to change their moral and physical standards?

I believe homosexuality is wrong, but as far as I am concerned gays can start their own Boy Scouts that accepts everyone.

Casey Martin can start his own Pro Golf tour that allows anyone of his choosing to use a cart. I could start my own dental school that admits anyone. I do not understand why these individuals cannot accept the rules and standards of others. There is more to life than Boy Scouts, professional golf and dental school. Take control of your own life. Choose something you can do, and do it well. Don't control others with the help of the government. I want America to remain the land of the free. Don't you?

Longhorn Suspended

AUSTIN, Texas — All-Big 12 freshman team selection Luke Axtell, who led Texas in three-point shooting and was second in scoring this season, has been suspended from the team.

A school press release late Tuesday said the suspension was indefinite. "Luke has refused to go to study hall or meet with tutors, and his performance has been indicative of that," Coach Tom Penders said in the statement.

SPORTS ROUNDUP

Sports Roundup is a daily dose of the latest scores, stats and news from the world of sports outside of K-State. Compiled from Associated Press reports.

NBA ROUNDUP

Bulls 90, Pacers 84

INDIANAPOLIS — Michael Jordan rebounded from a rare off night with a great performance against the Indiana Pacers.

Kept to 17 points on Monday, Jordan scored 35 points, made a big steal with 29 seconds to go and hit two clinching free throws with 11 seconds left as the Chicago Bulls beat the Pacers 90-84 Tuesday night.

The Bulls, who increased their lead over the Pacers to 3 1/2 games in the NBA Central Division, won even though Indiana's reserves outscored the Chicago bench 32-0.

Toni Kukoc and Ron Harper each scored 17 points for Chicago, and Dennis Rodman grabbed 19 rebounds. Chris Mullin led Indiana with 18 points.

Nuggets 90, Wizards 89

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Anthony Goldwire sank a three-pointer with 7.2 seconds left as the Denver Nuggets rallied for their third victory in four games.

Goldwire's basket capped a 10-2 Denver run during the final 75 seconds.

The Wizards had a final chance to win, but Chris Webber's fadeaway shot with three seconds left hit the side of the backboard and Johnny Newman blocked Tracy Murray's 15-footer as time expired.

Denver (8-59) needs to win two games to avoid finishing with the worst record in NBA history, the 9-73 mark set 25 years ago by the Philadelphia 76ers.

LaPhonso Ellis scored 18 points for the Nuggets. Chris Webber had 26 points and 10 rebounds for the Wizards, who lost for the second time in three games.

Hawks 117, Raptors 105

TORONTO — Mookie Blaylock had a triple-double and Tyrone Corbin led a three-point barrage with 20 points as the Atlanta Hawks beat the Toronto Raptors.

The Hawks hit 13 of 27 shots from three-point range to hand the Raptors their seventh defeat in eight games.

Blaylock finished with 11 rebounds, 12 assists and 10 points. Steve Smith scored 21 points for Atlanta and Christian Laettner added 18.

Doug Christie led Toronto with 30 points.

Knicks 100, 76ers 96

NEW YORK — Allan Houston scored 31 points, Larry Johnson had 26 and the New York Knicks, after leading by as many as 22, hung on to defeat the Philadelphia 76ers.

The Knicks snapped a three-game losing streak and won for only the second time in their past eight games.

They also snapped Philadelphia's three-game winning streak and prevented the 76ers from matching their longest victory streak of the season.

Allen Iverson scored 29 points for the Sixers.

Magic 99, Grizzlies 92

ORLANDO — Nick Anderson had 21 points and 12 rebounds as the Magic spoiled Vancouver coach Brian Hill's return to Orlando.

Horace Grant added 15 points, and Bo Outlaw had 11 points and 11 rebounds for the Magic.

Blue Edwards led the Grizzlies with 19 points off the bench. Bryant Reeves added 17 points and 11 rebounds, while Shafer Abdur-Rahim had 15 points.

It was Hill's first game in Orlando since he was fired by the Magic last year. Hill received a standing ovation from the crowd when he walked on the court before the game.

Suns 107, Kings 80

PHOENIX — Antonio McDyess had 19 points, and Rex Chapman scored 12 of his 17 in the third period as the Phoenix Suns won their fifth-straight game.

Cliff Robinson finished with 18 points for the Suns, who gave coach Danny Ainge a win on his 39th birthday.

Sacramento, despite Mitch Richmond's 19 points, lost its fifth straight game and fell to 6-29 on the road.

The Kings scored just nine points in the fourth quarter and committed 13 turnovers.

It was the Kings' 24th-consecutive loss in Phoenix since January 1988.

Rockets 96, Bucks 91

HOUSTON — Michael Drexler wasn't distracted by his impending retirement, getting 15 points and nine assists as the Houston Rockets beat the Milwaukee Bucks.

During the game, sources told The Associated Press that Drexler will retire after this season to coach his alma mater, the University of Houston.

Drexler is a 10-time All-Star who was named one of the NBA's 50 greatest players of all-time last year.

Elliot Perry and Armon Gilliam each scored 20 points for Bucks.

Matt Maloney scored 19 points for Houston, including five-for-eight from three-point range.

Mavericks 99, Celtics 93

DALLAS — Michael Finley scored four of his 16 points during the final 50 seconds as the Dallas Mavericks extended the Boston Celtics' losing streak to five games.

Finley's 18-foot jumper with 46.5 seconds left gave Dallas the lead for good, 95-93, and he added two free throws down the stretch.

Rookie Chris Anstey's career-high 26 points paced the Mavericks. The Celtics were led by Antoine Walker's 23 points.

RESIDENCE HALLS, FRATERNITIES PLAY IN INTRAMURAL BASKETBALL FINALS

STORIES BY SUN DEE MILLS • PHOTOS BY IVAN KOZAR

March Madness overtook intramural basketball finals with many similarities to the Big Dance. One underdog, Lambda Chi Alpha, took out the other underdog, FarmHouse, 52-45, in the intramural fraternity championship.

Lambda Chi came to the intramural fraternity postseason bracket as a Cinderella team, posting a 3-2 regular-season record. Smaller and younger than most of the opponents the team faced, Lambda Chi scrapped its way to the postseason.

FarmHouse, which suffered one regular season loss vs. Delta Upsilon, scrimmaged with Lambda Chi early, but didn't play that team during the season.

However, any team that defeats three teams unexpectedly to make it to the finals is not to be overlooked, said FarmHouse player Mark Montgomery, fifth-year senior in architectural engineering.

"I knew that they were going to be a really tough team and they were going to press us tight," Montgomery said. "We always like to be the underdog, and we pride ourselves on not looking past anyone. We knew they weren't going to lay down and die for us."

Dying was not what Lambda Chi had in mind at the game's beginning. The team hit seven of its first nine shots while FarmHouse hit only one. At a timeout at the 16:25 mark, Lambda Chi was up 12-2.

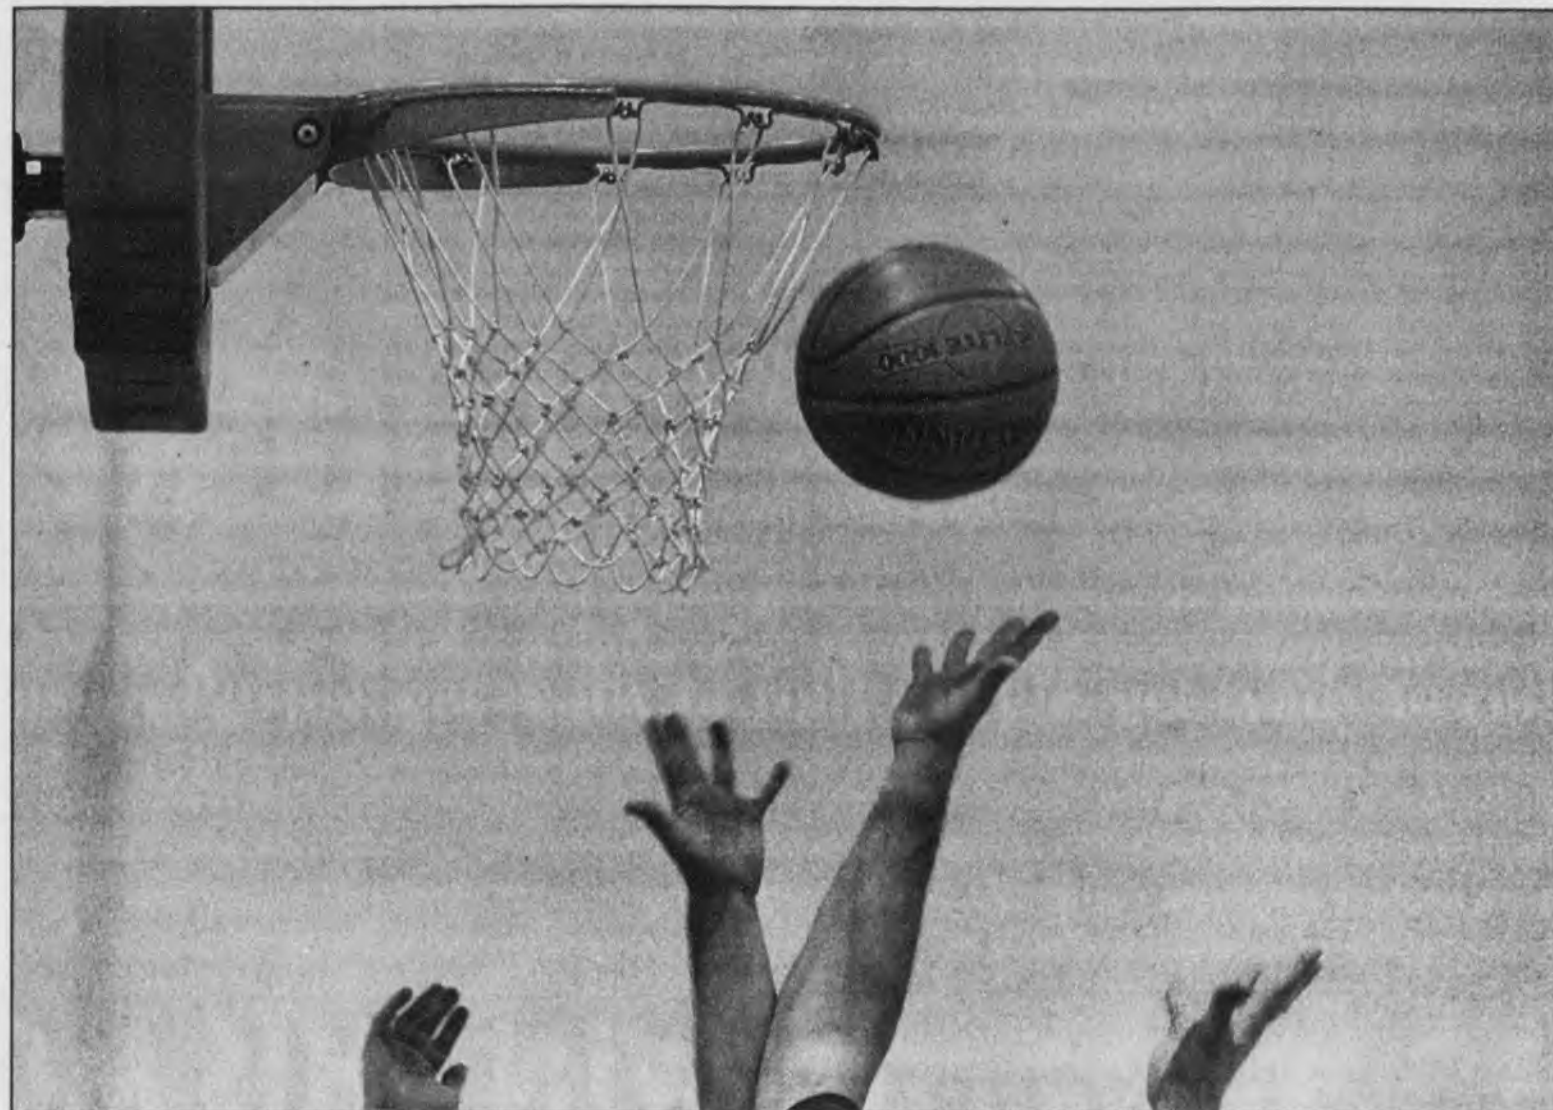

"We were breaking the press and thinking we needed to take the first shot we had," Montgomery said. "Our shot selection was a little poor, but a lot of those shots have fallen in the regular season."

Lambda Chi kept FarmHouse from scoring a basket until the 13-minute mark. FarmHouse didn't score again until 7:53 remained in the first half.

"Once the playoffs started, we started playing defense real well," Lambda Chi player Jeff Pelton, sophomore in business administration, said. "And you can win tournaments with defense."

At the half, Jeff and his older brother, Brandon Pelton, helped put Lambda Chi on top, 31-15. Paul Freeland, fifth-year senior in landscape architecture and Lambda Chi member, likened the situation to one in the NCAA Tournament.

"A lot of the guys in the house see us as the Valparaiso in the fraternity tournament bracket," Freeland said. "We're a young team, with only one senior, and no one expected us to be here."

The second half was a new story. Lambda Chi shooting chilled while intense passing and controlled offense put FarmHouse back in the game.

"Part of the problem in the first half was we were not taking good shots, not pounding it down low where we knew we could score," Montgomery said. "We were not running any offense. Once we started running offense, we started to score on them."

With 4:39 left in the game, a FarmHouse three-pointer cut the Lambda Chi lead to four points. But FarmHouse fouls and Lambda Chi free-throw shooting locked up the game for the new fraternity champions.

"We had too much of a deficit to overcome at halftime," Montgomery said. "We brought it back and couldn't seem to close it."

Brandon Pelton, senior in marketing and international business, said he couldn't recall the house ever winning an intramural fraternity championship.

"At the beginning of the season, I was just going to be happy to make the playoffs," he said. "Our defense has taken us the whole way."

Montgomery said FarmHouse handled the pressure but made forced mistakes.

"It really wasn't the press as much as we choked," Montgomery said. "We threw the ball away where we had easy passes and dropped balls."

Lambda Chi has at least one more game to prepare for — the winner of the six-foot-and-under division. This game will be played the Monday after spring break. If the house is victorious, Lambda Chi will meet the winner of the residence hall vs. independent teams.

The possibility of meeting bigger teams as the postseason continues doesn't intimidate the players, said Chris Collins, senior in marketing and international business and Lambda Chi coach.

"We've been playing people that are bigger and taller than us the entire tournament," Collins said. "We're just going to have to go out there and out hustle them, and do it for 40 minutes."

Lambda Chi wasn't the only team in the finals for the first time. FarmHouse was a rookie to the championship game also, Montgomery said.

"In the last four years, we've done very well, but we've never been to the fraternity championship," he said. "This is the farthest we've ever taken our team."

So, in a way, both teams won. "Yeah, that's the positive way to look at it," Montgomery said. "Maybe I'll be able to see it that way tomorrow."

Goodnow 3 hoops team takes residence hall championship

In the battle of the good, Goodnow 3 was victorious.

Goodnow 3 beat Putnam in the intramural residence hall championship basketball game, 52-47.

Putnam was undefeated going into the final game, and Goodnow 3's only loss in the regular season came at the hands of Putnam.

"I really think that this is about the best that we've ever been," Justin Hafer, fifth-year senior in architectural engineering and Goodnow 3 team captain, said.

Goodnow 3 made a run early, with Kyle Moore hitting three three-pointers in the first half. Moore, a freshman in mechanical engineering, was the team's leading scorer with 14 points.

At the half, Putnam was down by nine, 30-21. Solid three-point shooting put Putnam back in the game.

With three minutes left, Putnam cut Goodnow 3's lead to four points. Moore said this was characteristic of his team.

"It's just the way we play," he joked. "We like to keep things exciting."

Meanwhile, the Putnam defense didn't allow Goodnow 3 many good looks at the basket. Hafer said Goodnow 3's rhythm was disrupted.

"We just made some stupid passes," Hafer said. "We kind of got back on our heels."

At the two-minute mark, Putnam cut the lead to two points. To get the ball back, Putnam started fouling and putting Goodnow 3 players at the line. In the last two minutes, Goodnow 3 was five-of-eight from the free-throw line.

While Putnam had a chance, Goodnow 3 opened the gap on the free-throw line and sealed the victory. Moore said his team wasn't expecting to go this far.

"We were all hoping," Moore said. "Now we have to play for the all-U title."

Goodnow 3 will play the winner of the independent team playoffs to advance in the all-university tournament.

It's football season: Purple, get ready to roll; Purple, get ready to roll

Now that there aren't any basketball teams to root for, as the Cats are out of the National Invitational Tournament and the Chickenhawks won't have any opponents for us to cheer for until October, it's official:

It's football season.

Only 171 days until kickoff. Granted, the first game is against perennial non-power Indiana State, but there are still plenty of reasons to get excited, at least nine good ones, so let's talk some football.

1. Michael Bishop. To a degree, he lacked finesse last season. But he showed what he can do with a little preparation in the Tostitos Fiesta Bowl, completing 61 percent of his passes for 317 yards and four touchdowns.

He's got all spring to get his receivers' timing down and finish learning Coach Bill Snyder's system. That Heisman thing has been said before, and it'll be said again.

2. Frank Murphy. He's the Cats' latest, prized, community college recruit. He joins the Cats from Garden City Community College amidst many of the same circumstances that surrounded Bishop last fall. His athletic skills are unquestioned, but he'll have to learn Snyder's system and prove he can play Division I ball.

Bishop didn't have many problems — he was named the Big 12 Conference's offensive newcomer of the year. The difference between Bishop and Murphy, though, is Murphy has all spring to learn the Purple ropes. Bishop wasn't officially in the system until August.

Watch Murphy, 6-foot-1-inch and expected to play between 210 and 215 pounds, turn the corner with his 4.26 speed and power his way upfield. He can also catch the ball, which, combined with his speed, could make a simple screen play more exciting than a downfield bomb from Bishop to wide receiver Darnell McDonald.

3. Wide receivers. Snyder made no attempts to hide his disgust for the performance of the receivers last season. But they came through in the Fiesta Bowl, led by McDonald's seven receptions for 206 yards and three touchdowns. Also, none of the starters graduated.

With another spring of seasoning and the addition of community college transfer Quincy Morgan, a teammate of Bishop's at Blinn Community College in Texas, redshirt freshmen Julius McMillan and Aaron Lockett, this squad should get the job done.

4. The balanced offense. With Bishop's running and throwing ability, Murphy's speed and pass-catching ability, the wide-receiving corps and the return of fullback Brian Goolsby, whose short yardage and blocking skills are good enough for virtually any Division I team, the Cats should have more weapons than U.N. inspectors accuse Iraq of hiding.

5. K-State's ability to reload. The Cats lost two starting offensive linemen, Todd Weiner and Kendyl Jacob, to graduation, but have four 300-pounders waiting to hear their numbers called.

6. The Lynch Mob's front seven. Starting defensive ends Darren Howard and Joe Bob Clements return and community college transfer Matthew Childers, senior Mike Bush and sophomore Monty Beisel will provide enough competition for the spots to keep the two pushing to play as hard as they can.

At tackle, the Cats are hurt by the loss of Jerome Evans to graduation, but standout Damion McIntosh will be back, as will Andrae Rowe, who was good enough to pile up plenty of playing time last year.

K-State's trio of linebackers, Travis Ochs, Mark Simoneau and Jeff Kelly, will be one of the best groups in the nation. All three are powerful and know how to play the game. Ochs and Simoneau are former conference freshmen defensive players of the year and Kelly was the Big 12's defensive newcomer of the year in 1997.

When they're catching their breath on the sideline, keep your eyes on Turrell Williams, who started ahead of Kelly before going down with a knee injury, and redshirt freshman Ben Leber. Leber was an all-American in high school in Vermillion, S.D., and at 6-foot-3-inches and 235 pounds, he's got the size to pay the bills.

7. The secondary. Starting safeties Lamar Chapman and Jarrod Cooper return, as does starting defensive back Dyshod Carter and Adrian Beard, who started at defensive back before going down in the season opener with a knee injury.

The knock on the Cats' defense last season was the secondary, even though opponents completed barely more than 40 percent of their passes. Take those four defenders and throw safety Cephus Scott, and defensive backs Keith Black and DeRon Tyler — a community college transfer — into the mix and, well, you get the picture.

8. Special teams. All of the Cats' returners will be back, as will punter James Garcia, who averaged nearly 45 yards a punt and kicker Martin Gramatica, recognized as the best placekicker in the country after winning the Lou Groza Award.

9. Jason Peter, Grant Wistrom, Ahman Green, Scott Frost and Nebraska's entire starting offensive line in 1997. They're all gone. And the Cornhuskers come to Manhattan Nov. 14. That's 243 days if you're counting at home.

There's nine reasons to be excited in the middle of winter. And there's only 171 more days, Purple. Get ready to roll.

Purple get ready to roll.

RON TREWYN, ASSOCIATE VICE PROVOST FOR RESEARCH, WILL SERVE IN AN INTERIM CAPACITY AS VICE PROVOST FOR RESEARCH AND DEAN OF THE GRADUATE SCHOOL UNTIL A SUITABLE REPLACEMENT IS FOUND FOR TIM DONOGHUE.

K-State finds temporary replacement for Graduate School, research official

JON KURCHE
Kansas State Collegian

The upcoming retirement of Tim Donoghue, vice provost for research and dean of the Graduate School, is going to open up space that Ron Trewyn plans to fill.

Trewyn, associate vice provost for research, will serve in an interim capacity as vice provost for research and dean of the Graduate School until a suitable replacement for Donoghue is found.

"It's going to be a challenging time, but I'm looking forward to it," he said.

After an internal search to find someone for the position when Donoghue retires in June, the university provost's office decided to appoint Trewyn to the position. He will be in charge of overseeing graduate activities and supervising K-State research. The two positions are traditionally linked, although there are different responsibilities.

"It's basically a job intended to facilitate the research initiatives put forward by the faculty. The faculty then don't have to concern themselves with the particulars," Trewyn said of the vice provost's duties.

The job of dean of the Graduate School involves coordinating graduate efforts between colleges. Within each college, the specific graduate programs are run by the graduate faculty.

"It basically covers all aspects of graduate education. It crosses all the colleges," Trewyn said.

Trewyn will serve in the position for a short time. He said the university will probably begin looking for a more permanent appointment next year. Trewyn said, to fill the position, K-State will probably do a national search.

"Things are at this point a little uncertain as far as the time is involved. It will be at least through fall semester next year and possibly through spring," Trewyn said of the duration of his appointment.

Trewyn said one of his goals while serving as vice provost for research is to boost the funding. Last year K-State faculty received $52.3 million in competitive research awards from sources outside the university. That was an increase of $6.35 million from the previous year. K-State is ranked 76th in expenditures among public research universities. Trewyn said he would like to see the improvement trend continue.

"I think we certainly have strengths in various areas but there's room to improve on all levels," Trewyn said.

To facilitate improvement, Trewyn said research at the university needs to take a more interdisciplinary approach.

"There are various initiatives already under way. One of the things we've already got on-going is to encourage more interdisciplinary-type programs. I think the more success we have in those areas the more chance we have to increase the funding base. We hope they'll become competitive for a few major national funding awards," Trewyn said.

Four years ago, Trewyn worked at Ohio State University in the Department of Medical Biochemistry within the College of Medicine. While he was there he formed, developed and directed the Ohio State Biochemistry Research Program — the largest graduate initiative at Ohio State at the time, comprising more than 80 faculty members. He said he came to K-State because of the opportunities.

"I'm really enjoying the school, enjoying the community and the area. It's a nice place to be," Trewyn said.

He said he thought K-State was making progress in a number of fields.

"I think we're moving in the right directions on all fronts," Trewyn said.

Clinton urges compromise in Northern Ireland

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Invoking the spirit of St. Patrick, President Clinton urged swift, tough compromise Tuesday from the parties trying to negotiate peace in Northern Ireland.

"You can do it and you must, now," he said.

The president spent the day with key figures in the Northern Ireland talks, both at a St. Patrick's Day luncheon on Capitol Hill and at the White House in meetings with four delegations.

Clinton, wearing a green tie and matching cuff links sent by his Irish relatives, said peace is close at hand in Northern Ireland, as long as negotiators are willing to set aside differences for the common good.

"Concessions that today might seem hard to accept will seem so much less important in the light of an accord that brings hope and peace and an end to violence," Clinton said. "No one will be the loser if agreement is reached."

He called on all the parties to consider the spirit of St. Patrick, "the first and only person ever to bring Christianity to a distant, alien place without the sword."

as they reach for peace.

"Let us bring a future to Ireland worthy of that great achievement of St. Patrick," Clinton said. "This is the chance of a lifetime for peace in Ireland. You must do it for yourselves and your children. You can do it and you must, now."

The peace talks began in June 1996 and are supposed to end in May, ideally with a plan for governing Northern Ireland acceptable to both its Protestant majority and the large Catholic minority.

At the congressional luncheon, a tradition begun by the late House Speaker Tip O'Neill of Massachusetts, current Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., said he hoped that a year from now, the same parties can return to Washington having reached a peace agreement.

"We hope this event, in the middle of very hopeful negotiations, will further the prospects for achieving peace," Gingrich said.

Watching — from separate tables — were Gerry Adams, leader of Sinn Fein, a legal political party allied with Irish Republican Army; David Trimble, head of the Ulster Unionists, Northern Ireland's largest Protestant party; and John Hume, leader of the Social Democratic and Labor Party, a moderate Catholic party.

Hume and Trimble met with Clinton later Tuesday. Adams met with him Monday.

Aside from the discussions about peace, Clinton soaked in Irish culture at the luncheon. As tenor Mark Forrest belted out the Irish standard "Danny Boy," Clinton swayed and mouthed the lyrics. Afterward, he and the other leaders were escorted from the Capitol by bagpipers.

Clinton began his meetings with Irish Prime Minister Bertie Ahern, who gave the president a crystal bowl of shamrocks. Ahern told the luncheon that he, too, believes a peace accord is near, and agreed with Clinton's call for compromise.

"I do not pretend that agreement will be easy, or that there are not extremists on both sides of the divide, determined to undermine our efforts," Ahern said. "But I also know we have come further than we ever have in the past."

In Belfast, thousands of Catholics marched in a St. Patrick's Day parade to City Hall, a first for the center of the traditionally pro-British Protestant city.

City sets Anderson Avenue payment

► CITY COMMISSION VOTES 5-0 FOR LOCAL FUNDING OF $4 MILLION PROJECT.

NATE JENKINS
Kansas State Collegian

The Manhattan City Commission on Tuesday night passed a motion that tentatively sets the amount the city will have to pay for the Anderson Avenue project at $4,230,050.

The motion, which passed 5-0, means the city will enter an agreement with the Kansas Department of Transportation to receive grant funds for the project. The city-state agreement, common in road improvement projects, sets the transportation department's commitment at no more than $2,713,000.

That sum will not only come out of the state's pocket, but also authorizes the Kansas secretary of transportation to collect federal grant aid for the project. The contract also binds the city to follow state and federal regulations while working on Anderson Avenue.

The funding splits for the city's cost aren't certain at this point, but estimates in a memo from City Manager Jack Messer have the Stormwater Management Fund contributing $3,070,150 and general obligation bonds providing $914,750 for the project.

The City/University Tax Fund, which consists of sales tax money collected on campus, will provide $245,000.

The resolution also authorizes the city to acquire property from landowners along Anderson Avenue.

They can purchase the property or condemn it and use it for the street expansion.

Just compensation amounts have been set for landowners in the area, which runs from 14th Street to Sunset Avenue, but those values won't be made public.

The city must acquire at least 32 pieces of property along the street before construction can begin.

Israelis, Palestinians might meet under Swiss talks

ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — In a move that could rekindle Mideast peace talks, Israel and the Palestinians have tentatively agreed to meet under Swiss auspices to discuss Israeli settlements in the West Bank, officials said Tuesday.

European and Arab U.N. delegates downplayed that initiative and passed a General Assembly resolution calling for a meeting with wider international representation — a move immediately attacked by the United States, which backs the Swiss proposal.

Israeli U.N. Ambassador Dore Gold told The Associated Press that Israel considered the Swiss proposal pragmatic and was ready to go ahead.

Palestinian observer Nasser al-Kidwa said his people were ready to cooperate with Switzerland, but preferred a U.N. General Assembly resolution that called for a meeting of all signatory nations to the Geneva Convention, which bans the usurpation of land by an occupying power.

Israel does not recognize the Convention's application in the territory it captured in the 1967 Mideast War, which it does not regard as occupied.

The Palestinians and the European Union say the Convention would ban settlement building in occupied areas.

The Swiss meeting, which has yet to be scheduled, would revive talks on a substantive issue for the first time since Israeli settlement building defied negotiations a year ago, officials said.

Israel staunchly opposes a full meeting of the Geneva Convention signatories, eager to keep away parties it sees as pro-Palestinian, especially the 15-member European Union.

The General Assembly resolution, a reiteration of a November resolution, was approved by a vote of 120-3. Israel, the United States and Micronesia voted against it. General Assembly resolutions are not binding.

U.S. Ambassador Bill Richardson said the resolution "prejudges the outcome of discussions that have not yet taken place."

British Ambassador John Weston, speaking on behalf of the European Union, pressed for a full convention of the Geneva signatories.

Meanwhile, U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan said at the world body's headquarters in Geneva on Tuesday that he expects the United States soon will announce new ideas to restart the talks.

"I spoke to the American administration before leaving New York," said Annan, shortly before departing on a nine-day visit to the Middle East. "I can't reveal anything today, but we are supporting the U.S. efforts, and we hope both sides will work with them."

Secretary of State Madeleine Albright might arrange to meet next week in Europe with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat. She has called on Mideast leaders to make the hard decisions that are needed for further progress.

Annan stressed that he had no plans to act as a mediator during his trip. "I'm going to listen, I am going to learn and I am going to reflect with the leaders of the region, and I am going to do whatever I can to assist in the peace process."

Annan arrived in Jordan on Tuesday. Besides the peace process, his discussions will focus on the fate of an estimated 2 million Palestinian refugees living in 13 refugee camps in Jordan, said a senior government official, speaking on customary condition of anonymity.

The Palestinians settled in Jordan after fleeing their homes, mostly in the West Bank, after the 1948 and 1967 Arab-Israeli wars.

House overwhelmingly rejects state tax-reduction proposal

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The House emphatically rejected the latest Senate tax-relief package Tuesday, sending a strong message that any bill that doesn't include something for the working poor faces a similar fate.

All but four of the 125 representatives voted against accepting the proposal the Senate passed last week that lacked two key components favored by the House — an earned income tax credit for the working poor and a food sales tax credit.

"The message should be we need more tax relief for the working poor. We need at least one and maybe both of these before we can consider this bill," House Speaker Tim Shallenburger, R-Baxter Springs, said.

The bill, which reduces state revenues by $182 million, is in a House-Senate conference committee. Rep. Phill Kline, who is head of the panel, said negotiators will gather at the bargaining table "as soon as we can."

The state expects updated revenue estimates on April 3, but Kline and Shallenburger said they don't want to wait that long to reach agreement on a tax-relief bill.

"We've got a $400 million windfall. It's time we give some of it back," Kline said. "The longer the money sits on the table, the greater the chance it will be spent on government rather than giving it back to the people."

Likewise, Audrey Langworthy, R-Prairie Village, said she doesn't want to wait until April because the delay "only invites mischief."

Rep. Bruce Larkin, D-Baileyville, urged colleagues to reject the Senate version and "send a strong message that this plan isn't fair, and it's time to get down to the bare bones."

Agreeing was Rep. Nancy Kirk, D-Topeka, who said, "We want the Senate to know this is the most flagrant, arrogant disregard for the needs of Kansas families."

Rep. Troy Findley, D-Lawrence, said the Senate "has taken away the opportunity to provide tax relief for every Kansan."

Other lawmakers called the Senate bill "one-sided tax cuts" that favor the wealthy and ignore the poor.

"When we have Kansans living below the poverty level and paying taxes when the state has a surplus is unconscionable," said Kline, R-Shawnee.

One who wanted to accept the Senate version was Rep. Melvin Neufeld, who said he liked the increased funding for education in the Senate bill.

"I want to vote for the children," said Neufeld, R-Ingalls.

Senate President Dick Bond said he met informally with House leaders and predicted an agreement will be reached. He declined to respond to the House members' comments.

"I tried to give up name-calling right after the seventh grade," said Bond, R-Overland Park.

The Senate plan tied tax relief to education spending by increasing what the state provides to public schools, from a current annual amount of $3,670 per pupil to $3,711 per pupil.

The bill increased basic state aid to public schools by $44.9 million, compared to a $35.9 million increase proposed by Gov. Bill Graves. The aid totals more than $2 billion in the proposed state budget.

The bill is the second tax-relief measure the Senate passed this session. Previously, it sent a $168 million version to the House, which boosted it to $225 million.

The bill includes a $4 million reduction in property tax; sales tax credits for nonprofit groups such as Girl Scouts and churches; increased standard income tax deductions; and personal income tax exemptions.

It also offers a sales tax exemption for residential remodeling and repeals the state inheritance tax and adopts a state estate tax tied to the federal estate tax code.

Bill increases investigation power

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — A bill that significantly strengthens the state ethics commission's ability to investigate alleged wrongdoing in politics and government received Gov. Bill Graves' signature Tuesday.

The new law, which will take effect July 1, will give the Commission on Governmental Standards and Conduct unfettered power to subpoena documents and compel people to testify under oath.

The commission will now have more power to investigate alleged violations of state campaign finance and ethics laws than it has had since its creation in 1974. It is the same power already available to dozens of other state agencies.

"We're constantly trying to define ways to demonstrate, to have Kansans believe, that the way we conduct ourselves is appropriate and honest and above board," Graves said.

"Giving this kind of subpoena authority to the oversight group clearly says we're all willing to play by these rules."

Graves had a bill-signing ceremony in the reception area of his Statehouse office.

Standing behind him were Senate Minority Leader Anthony Hensley, D-Topeka; Sen. Janice Hardenburger, R-Haddam, chairwoman of the Senate Elections Committee; Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, chairman of the House Elections Committee; and Rep. Gwen Welshimer, D-Wichita, the House committee's ranking minority party member.

Carol Williams, the ethics commission's executive director, and Charles Smithson, its attorney, also attended, but they declined Graves' invitation to stand with the legislators.

Williams later said, "They are the ones who did this."

Under current law, the commission first must notify the subject of an investigation or a potential witness that it intends to subpoena them or their records, then give them 30 days to respond.

The commission's staff has referred to the provision as the bonfire or burn the records provision, saying it gives people time to destroy records.

The bill Graves signed eliminates the provision.

"Put away the hot dogs and marshmallows," Smithson said after the ceremony. "The bonfire has been extinguished."

Williams and Smithson said having the restriction on the commission's ability to issue subpoenas delays investigations and sometimes frustrates them.

"Two days ago, I wanted to use it," Smithson said. He declined to say what he was investigating.

The bonfire provision became law in 1990, as a compromise between legislators who wanted to give the commission full subpoena power and legislators who said they feared witch hunts.

Before 1990, the commission could not issue a subpoena until it had filed a complaint. The problem was the commission needed subpoenas to collect evidence to build a case but couldn't issue them under the law until it concluded it had a case.

"We won't know what we haven't discovered," Graves said.

Jury hears conflicting arguments in Freeman trial

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BILLINGS, Mont. — Six Montana Freeman were ready to use violence to protect their comrades from arrest during the 81-day standoff with the FBI on the plains of eastern Montana, a federal prosecutor said Tuesday.

But two defense lawyers insisted their clients were simply followers swept up in events.

The conflicting versions came in opening arguments during the trial of six Freeman, the first criminal trial in connection with the standoff.

Four of the defendants continued to watch the proceedings on closed-circuit television Tuesday from a holding cell. U.S. District Judge John C. Coughenour banished them from the courtroom Monday after they disrupted the trial opening with shouting and cursing.

Court-appointed lawyers stepped in to represent them, but the attorneys said they had received no cooperation from their clients.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Jim Seykora said in his opening statement that the jury would see videotapes showing violent acts, the six defendants carrying weapons and robberies of two TV news crews.

"The evidence will make it clear they were ready, willing and able to shoot FBI agents and other law enforcement officers to prevent them from arresting their friends," Seykora said.

Joseph Massman, who is representing Steven C. Hance, 48, said his client was merely a follower and did not act with knowledge or purpose.

Lisa Swanson, who is representing 25-year-old James E. Hance, said James Hance was simply following his father's lead.

The two Hances, along with another son, John, 21, all of Charlotte, N.C., and Jon Barry Nelson, 42, of Marion, Kan., were the Freeman ejected from the courtroom. The judge and lawyers already have agreed to instruct the jury not to consider the absence of the four from the courtroom in reaching a verdict.

Two Freeman sat at the defense table — Elwin Ward, 57, and Edwin Clark, 47 — but they also refused to participate in the trial. They remain seated when Coughenour enters and leaves the courtroom, a bit of contempt he ignores.

The six men are charged with being accessories by aiding federal fugitives — the other Freeman in the stronghold dubbed "Justus Township" — to avoid arrest during the standoff that ended June 13, 1996.

The Freeman's leaders are scheduled for trial in May on charges including bank fraud and threatening to kidnap and kill a federal judge.

Clark, an original owner of the foreclosed farm compound, also is charged with attempted bank fraud for trying to deposit a $100 million Freeman check in the Garfield County Bank in nearby Jordan and writing checks on the account to pay real estate loans.

Two dozen people are charged in connection with the Freeman's two-year operation from their isolated compound. The FBI said 800 people from around the country took lessons at the rural stronghold in how to issue worthless liens and warrants the Freeman claim are legal tender.

Presidential advisers knock AIDS reduction plan

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Clinton's AIDS advisers unanimously expressed no confidence in the administration's commitment to reducing the spread of AIDS, accusing officials of playing politics with people's lives.

"The administration's current policy on needle-exchange programs threatens the public health, and directly contradicts current scientific evidence," according to the resolution approved Tuesday by the Presidential Council on HIV/AIDS.

It was the harshest criticism yet from the panel, whose members are furious that the administration has not allowed federal funding for programs giving drug addicts clean needles in exchange for dirty ones that might be contaminated with the deadly HIV virus.

"Our attention is exhausted," said the panel's chairman, Dr. Scott Hitt, who treats patients with HIV and AIDS in Los Angeles.

Hitt estimated that tens of thousands of new HIV infections could be prevented through needle-exchange programs. More than half of all people who become infected with HIV catch the deadly virus through contaminated needles or sex with injecting drug users — or are children born to infected addicts.

"Tragically, we must conclude that it is a lack of political will, not scientific evidence, that is creating this failure to act," the council said Tuesday in a letter to Clinton.

Using taxpayer money to buy needles for addicts has become a politically touchy issue, with conservatives arguing that these programs send the wrong message.

One council member, Terje Anderson of Colorado Springs, Colo., spoke of his past heroin use and argued that availability of needles is no more likely to cause drug use than matches are to cause smoking.

"The question should be, 'Do you care about the lives of people like me?'" said Anderson, who no longer uses drugs but is HIV positive. "Are you willing to take steps — perhaps politically risky or unpopular steps — in order to save lives?"

Federal law allows funding of needle-exchange programs, but only if the Department of Health and Human Services concludes that they are effective in reducing the spread of HIV without increasing drug use.

HHS Secretary Donna Shalala has already agreed with leading scientists that the programs are effective in fighting HIV. But she says she is still reviewing drug use data, promising to make the decision on good science.

"We will operate on the best information available," agency spokeswoman Laurie Boeder said Tuesday.

Council members say the proof is already there, citing six government-funded reports, including an independent group of experts convened by the National Institutes of Health.

"Does needle exchange promote drug use? A preponderance of evidence shows either no change or decreased drug use," the NIH concluded more than a year ago, saying the ban on funding for these programs will lead to many thousands of unnecessary deaths.

But Shalala is still waiting for studies by drug abuse experts and is still reviewing the data already available, Boeder said.

The results of studies will not be available for several months, she said, and added that there is no timetable for announcing a decision.

Council members accused Shalala of letting politics dictate policy, but they stopped short of calling for her resignation, as some members have suggested. They have also rejected suggestions that they resign in protest.

More than 80 needle exchanges, paid for by private, state or local money, already operate in the United States, but AIDS activists say expanding them will require federal funding. More importantly, Hitt said, more private money would be generated if the government gave its endorsement.

"Many people in this country and the world are looking to the secretary to say the science is there," he said. "It's time for her to come out and say where she stands."

Widow claims presidential affair, tries to sell book rights

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Kathleen Willey, struggling financially since her husband's death, was seeking a $300,000 book deal for her autobiography before she went on national television to accuse President Clinton of making an unwelcome sexual advance, a publisher said Tuesday.

Michael Viner, head of New Millennium Entertainment in Beverly Hills, Calif., said Willey's lawyer contacted him six or seven weeks ago offering a book about her life that would include the alleged encounter with Clinton, her ordeal over her husband's suicide and her views of political life in Washington.

The book discussions commenced just a few weeks after Willey gave a deposition to lawyers in the Paula Jones sexual harassment suit against Clinton.

Willey's lawyer, Daniel Gecker, wanted at least $300,000 for the book, Viner said, who discussed the project by telephone and said the two were scheduled to meet in person in Los Angeles on Friday.

Gecker, in an interview with The New York Times, denied he was pursuing a book contract for his client, but acknowledged he approached Viner to determine if he would be interested in such a book.

Meanwhile, the federal grand jury investigating allegations of a presidential affair and cover-up involving Clinton and former White House intern Monica Lewinsky called for testimony Tuesday from Catherine Allday Davis. The woman's name had not surfaced previously in the case. She spent most of the day there, and her lawyer, James Bensfield, declined to comment on why she was there.

Also, White House diarist Ellen

McCarthy testified for about 30 minutes before the federal grand jury investigating the Lewinsky case. McCarthy organizes presidential papers for archival purposes and works in the Old Executive Office Building next to the White House.

"Monica Lewinsky did not show up on the logs," her lawyer, Jeffrey Jacobowitz, said. However, he said not every presidential meeting is recorded.

Willey faces legal and financial troubles stemming from her late husband's law practice. Edward Willey, a real estate lawyer who committed suicide in 1993, was being sued for $275,000 by a client. The client has sued to try to get Willey to pay off the debt.

"She needed a lifeboat and I think that was it," Viner said of the prospective book deal, adding that he was not willing to pay $300,000 for her story.

Willey's financial problems began years ago but are bearing down on her and her children now. They are fighting a lawsuit filed by a Richmond businessman who claims they should pay him $274,495 owed by Willey's late husband.

Willey's husband helped Anthony V. Lanasa, a Richmond produce company owner, win a judgment from the city for that amount in 1993.

Instead of turning the money over to Lanasa, Willey used the check to pay off debts to the Internal Revenue Service that he'd racked up because of bad real estate investments.

Edward Willey confessed that he had embezzled the funds court documents showed. Furious, Lanasa gave him two weeks to pay it back.

Edward Willey had his wife co-sign a note guaranteeing that they would pay back Lanasa. But Edward Willey couldn't come up with the money. On Nov. 29, 1993, the same day his wife met with Clinton, Edward Willey shot and killed himself.

Lanasa says Kathleen Willey still owes him the money. So far she has fought off in court his efforts to make her pay him.

"I don't think I've got a snowball's chance in hell of seeing that money," Lanasa said.

"I CAN'T REACH MY LICENSE UNLESS YOU HOLD MY BEER."

THE BIRDHOUSES OF ARCHITECT BRENT BOWMAN ARE ON DISPLAY THROUGH APRIL 24 AT THE MANHATTAN CENTER FOR THE ARTS. GALLERY HOURS ARE FROM 9 A.M. TO 5 P.M. MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY. ADMISSION IS FREE.

Birdhouse exhibit benefits auction

If trees are the public housing projects for the bird community, then Manhattan architect Brent Bowman's birdhouses must be Beverly Hills.

Each birdhouse, included in a small exhibition at the Manhattan Center for the Arts until April 24, is a somewhat ersatz copy or homage to an assortment of building styles and forms.

Bowman's birdhouses, a collaborative project among the employees at Brent Bowman and Associates Architects, were created specifically for Manhattan's Catholic schools' annual auction. Although the auction itself dates back fifteen years, one birdhouse has been included since 1989.

Each birdhouse design responded to the annual theme of the auction, so the variety of styles and vernaculars used allowed Bowman the freedom to build such detailed birdhouses as the 1927 Ziegfeld Theater in New York to a wild West saloon. The birdhouses are massive constructions of different wood varieties that suggest children's building blocks à la Frank Lloyd Wright.

The most exquisite birdhouse, and one of which Bowman said he tends to be particularly proud, is a copy of the Rhine House of 1883 in Napa Valley, Calif. The house was built by a member of the Beringer family, of Beringer wine fame.

Roofed in copper, the house is highly crafted in fine wood with an eye for small, carved details. It's an amalgamation of styles — Victorian and French country with a nod to Rhine River castles and great American porches.

The 1997 birdhouse was a replica of Danforth Chapel. Others include a southwestern-style adobe church, a lighthouse based on the Sandy Point Lighthouse on Chesapeake Bay and an authentic Irish pub. Of all the designs, Bowman's homage to a Boston house by the 19th-century architect Henry Hobson Richardson is perhaps the most like Bowman's own work.

Scattered on the floor of the small gallery are guides to bird species and books on birdhouses. Small sticker engravings of various birds dot the white walls, suggesting there's a waiting list to move in to these birdhouses.

However, these birdhouses were never meant for the birds, but as collector pieces.

"We just wanted to do something fun, intriguing and highly crafted," Bowman said. "I don't think there's been a bird in any one of them."

The birdhouses typically bring between $600 and $1,800. Nearly all of the birdhouses have been purchased by Dick Edwards, owner of the Dick Edwards Ford dealership in Manhattan.

Bowman designed the St. Thomas More Catholic Church on Kimball Avenue. He completed both Hale Library and the Manhattan Regional Airport in 1997 and is overseeing the construction of Manhattan's Public Library and City Hall. Bowman and Associates also designed the Kimball Avenue fire station and Frank Anneberg Park.

Student art show winners displayed in Union gallery

TODD PACEY
Kansas State Collegian

Legos, sculptures and drawings can be found in the Union art gallery in the exhibition of winners from the Union Program Council's Student Art Show.

Entries for the contest were placed in two categories for judging: three-dimensional and two-dimensional. The top three from each category were awarded $30, $20 and $10. The judges also deemed Nik Meisel's "Zero A" Best in Show, and he was awarded $50.

"We had a graphic design illustration category, but the number of entrants was too small. We combined those entries with the 2-D category and had just two categories," said Susan Vering, junior in fine arts and UPC Arts committee chairperson.

Out of the 42 pieces entered in the contest, 17 will be on display at the Union art gallery until Thursday. Meisel, junior in fine arts, also placed first in the 3-D category. Jon A. Radermacher, senior in fine arts, placed second and third in 3-D with his pieces "Containment #1" and "Containment #2."

"The pieces that I entered into the contest were actually inspired by geometric shapes, the triangle and the circle," Radermacher said.

Radermacher, who aspires to become a metalsmith teacher, explained the trade as a combination of blacksmithing and art. He said that while a majority of his work is done by hand, he wants it to have the appearance of industrial work.

In the 2-D category, Jamie Sipes, sophomore in fine arts, placed first with "Withered Beauty." Jacqueline Roettger, junior in fine arts, was awarded second place for her piece, "To Study," and Ronald Cook, junior in fine arts, placed third with his abstract, "On Tour."

"I like to draw. I have tons of ideas for things that I want to draw, but I just need to find the time to draw them," Cook said.

Cook, who is planning on a career in graphic design, said his main goal is drawing. Most of the work he does with graphic design involves freehand letter form, combining words with art.

Family tree dating acceptable if branches spread far apart

Cassandra & Jack

There are two sides to every story. After an ugly breakup a few months ago, Jack and Cassie have put their differences aside to give advice to those in need.

Kissing cousin has questions

Dear Jack,
I am thinking about dating this really cool girl, but she is technically my cousin. My dad's second wife's brother's daughter to be exact. Is it wrong to date her? Is it violating any kind of weird law?
Unsure

Dear "Incest is Best,"
Hey, whatever it takes. I think you two are far enough away on the family tree not to have to worry about any problems with your offspring. It's legal, so I say go for it.
Good luck,
Jack

Dear Obviously Confused,

Family is not for dating. There are plenty of other fish in the sea from outside of your school.
Love,
Cassie

Boyfriend likes to kiss and tell

Dear Cassie,
My boyfriend likes to talk about his past girlfriends. A lot. How do I tell him I don't want to know about his past experiences?
Reliving History

Dear History,
When he tells you about these experiences, he's really telling you what you do wrong or what you don't do at all. Take these hints as lessons. Perform as his ex-girlfriend used to. That's all he wants.

Good Luck,
Jack

Dear History,
If he misses them so much, tell him to go back to them. As for Jack's suggestion that he is hinting around about his sexual wants, if the guy isn't open enough to tell you what his wants are, then dump him. Better yet, start talking about your ex-boyfriends or girlfriends and see how he likes a taste of his own medicine.
Love,
Cassie

Women defend charges in harassment case

► MCKINNEY PURSUES SUIT FOR LIBEL; ACCUSERS DEFEND SEXUAL HARASSMENT TRIAL.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Women who charged Sgt. Maj. Gene McKinney with sexual harassment are banding together to defend his chief accuser in a libel suit he filed against her.

"The truth is my defense," retired Sgt. Maj. Brenda Hoster said Tuesday. "It will prevail in the end."

McKinney, formerly the Army's top enlistee, was acquitted in a Fort Belvoir, Va., court-martial of 18 counts involving sexual misconduct, but he was convicted of obstruction of justice. He accuses Hoster in his own lawsuit of lying by claiming he grabbed her in a Hawaii hotel room when she was his speech-writer in 1996.

McKinney is seeking $1.5 million in damages, including $500,000 for expected loss of retirement benefits because the jury on Monday demoted him one rank, to master sergeant. He also was reprimanded.

His attorney, Charles Gittins, said McKinney didn't file suit against his five other accusers because a federal law prohibits lawsuits between current members of the military, although he said they also lied.

"We demonstrated, I believe conclusively, that the women were liars, cheats and frauds," Gittins said. "We proved it."

The women, incensed by Gittins' attacks on them inside and outside of court, told Hoster they would support her, including in court and by raising money for a defense fund, her attorney, Susan Barnes, said.

Barnes insisted that if McKinney pursues the libel case, the women will prove their accusations that he pressured them for sex at military conferences, at his office and home.

As the O.J. Simpson case showed, it often is easier to prove a case in a civil trial than in a criminal court.

"In a criminal case, the standard of proof is beyond a reasonable doubt," said Bernard Corr, a law professor at American University. "In a civil case, you need only prove something with a preponderance of evidence, which is a much lower standard."

Corr said there are four basic elements to a libel case: whether a defendant said or wrote something defamatory; whether other people heard it; whether it damaged the person who sued; and whether it was the truth.

"In this case, the focus will be on whether the women's allegations are true," he said. "If they are, that's a complete defense."

Hoster went public with her accusations just more than a year ago, giving an interview with The New York Times in a story that received front-page play and led to McKinney's dismissal as sergeant major of the Army. She also talked about her accusations on TV talk shows, unlike McKinney's other accusers, who kept a low profile after coming forward.

The women, who didn't know one another and hadn't met until last week when they attended the final days of the six-week trial, said they were bitter about how they were treated on the stand. Defense attorneys laid bare their personal lives, including unplanned pregnancies, and portrayed them as liars out for revenge because of job disputes or other slights.

"I know I'm not a liar," Hoster said

Tuesday on NBC's "Today." "I now know those other women aren't liars either, and we're not cheats and we're not frauds. ... The truth is my defense."

McKinney, 47, had faced a possible five years in prison and a reduction of rank to private on the obstruction of justice conviction for coaching one of his accusers to lie to Army investigators. If the 29-year veteran had been convicted of all counts, he could have gone to prison for as long as 55 1/2 years and been dishonorably discharged.

The eight military jurors, including four officers — two of them women — and four enlisted men, are barred by regulations from talking about their votes, made by secret ballot, or what went into their deliberations.

CLASSIFIEDS

CLASSIFIED AD WRITING TIPS

► List items or services first. Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

IT'S OFFICIAL: HE'S THE MANN

Mann, Macklin victorious in runoff, plan to focus on advising next year

ANGELA KISTNER
Kansas State Collegian

Walking around clutching their hearts, Tracey Mann and Andy Macklin nervously waited for the results to come in.

"My heart's beating fast," Macklin said.

When the call finally came, Mann hugged Macklin and whispered the results into his ear. The two had beaten their opponent, Greg Davis, by 218 votes in Wednesday's student body presidential runoff election.

Without giving a hint as to the outcome, the candidates walked into the dining room of the Theta Xi fraternity house and stood on two chairs in front of a crowd of about 200 supporters.

"I would like to be the first person to congratulate K-State's new student body vice president, Andy Macklin," said Mann, junior in political science and agricultural economics.

The crowd broke out into a loud cheer.

Neither Mann nor Macklin could speak for the next few minutes, while the crowd cheered and yelled, "Speech, speech."

Finally Mann spoke again.

"Wow. What do you say?" he said.

Mann thanked his supporters and said he and Macklin couldn't have won the election without the help of family and friends.

"This is not because of Andy and I. This is because of you," Mann said in his speech. "It's been a blessing to us to have all of you behind us."

Macklin, junior in mechanical engineering, said he was honored to be Mann's vice president.

"I can't believe we're standing up here. Just the fact that Tracey asked me to be his running mate is a great honor," he said. "To be standing with him now is the greatest honor. This is special."

Supporters at the election party said they were thrilled for Mann and Macklin.

Jake Worcester, sophomore in agricultural economics, said the two deserved the win.

"I'm super excited. These guys deserved it. They really worked hard," he said. "This is going to be a great year. They're wonderful, wonderful."

Jileena Meek, senior in hotel restaurant management, said she was happy for the candidates.

"I'm just happy that two neat guys like this can serve us. They are two respectable guys who will make K-State really proud," she said.

Macklin said Davis and Jim Boomer's campaign had him and Mann worried. Davis received 1,093 votes, compared to Mann's 1,311.

"They ran a great campaign," Macklin said of his opponents. "They're great guys. They had some great ideas."

Mann commended his opponents for their campaign.

"First of all, I would like to commend Davis and Boomer. They ran a great campaign," he said. "I'm glad I can call them my friends."

Mann and Macklin will replace President Tim Riemann and Vice President Jennafer Neufeld in April. Mann said as soon as he gets into office he is going to start working on his issues.

Davis, Boomer lose presidential bid, thank campaign supporters for help

KELLEE MILLER
Kansas State Collegian

With the philosophy that life goes on, Greg Davis informed his supporters at 12th Street Pub of his and Jim Boomer's loss in Wednesday's runoff election for student body president.

Davis and Boomer received 1,093 votes, or 45.5 percent. Their opponents, Tracey Mann and Andy Macklin, received 1,311 votes.

"Things without remedy should go without regard," Davis said. "What's done is done. Let's have some fun."

Davis and Boomer thanked their supporters for their hard work during the campaign and said they hoped their influence would encourage others outside of Student Governing Association to run for office next year.

Davis, senior in marketing and management information systems, said the 218 vote spread showed that the student body voiced its opinion.

"We had five weeks of hard work," Davis said. "The student voice has been heard, but we gave it our best shot."

Davis said his plans for next year are unsure, but he could graduate in May.

"If I stick around next year, I know I would like to get involved in student government in some way," Davis said.

Boomer, senior in marketing information systems and accounting, said he will be staying at K-State next year and finishing up his dual major. He said if he and Davis learned one thing during this election, it was to stay out of politics. Nevertheless, he said he was proud of the campaign.

"I wouldn't change a thing," he said. "I am proud of the support Greg and I received."

Davis said Mann will do a good job next year as student body president.

"I have a lot of respect for Tracey," he said. "I think he was meant for the position in the end."

Despite the loss, Davis said he hopes Mann and Macklin will focus on his main campaign issue — closing the communication gap on campus.

"I think the student body is uninformed," he said. "Tracey and Andy have the experience and will do well."

Davis said he also hopes Mann and Macklin will incorporate community service into their administration plans.

"K-State needs to blend campus and community living," he said. "If we add community service to our already credible leadership studies program, our university would be the pioneer institution in the Midwest."

Davis said he had no regrets about running for the office.

"I got to meet more people and

Using common sense might prevent students from trouble during spring break

WYNN DALTON
Kansas State Collegian

Whether going to the island beaches or the ski slopes, there are tips students should remember to stay safe and have a good time during spring break.

Lt. Richard Herrman of the K-State Police said it is important for students to secure their residences before leaving.

"Any valuables you may leave behind — make sure they are secure enough so that things don't get stolen from you while you are out of town," Herrman said.

Herrman said one of the most obvious signs people are out of town is the collection of mail, outside of a residence. Stop mail delivery at the post office, or get someone to pick it up regularly.

Students should be aware that crimes of opportunity increase prior to spring break, Herrman said, because people are looking for the means to go on these trips, too.

"If it's anything of value that can be pawned or sold, those less fortunate and with less frugals will take advantage of that now to get funds or money for their activities over break," Herrman said.

Sgt. Stanley Conkwright, Riley County Police Department, said that after students secure their residences, they also should check their motel accommodations.

Conkwright said students should also try to make sure the accommodations they have during break are secure — they should be located in a well-populated area and well lit at all times.

"I like motels that have the magnetic cards, because when they put that into the computer, the card is set up to be active for only a certain length of time," Conkwright said.

Most hotels provide safety deposit boxes for their guests at no charge, and Conkwright said he encourages students to use them to protect valuable items, cash and credit cards from being stolen.

While on vacation, use alcohol responsibly.

When traveling, don't drink and drive.

Herrman said alcohol tends to diminish reasoning, and people are more vulnerable when they have been drinking.

He said women should be especially aware of rape drugs.

"If you're drinking beer, don't accept open containers from someone else. Take the beer can or bottle closed. Open it yourself, and keep a hold of it.

Don't set it down someplace for someone else to add something to it," Herrman said. "If you are drinking mixed drinks, make sure they are not pre-mixed by somebody else."

Herrman said he encourages students to designate a non-drinker, because it could be just as important as having a designated driver.

"If you've got one or two people who aren't drinking they can help keep an eye on the others, and if someone all of a sudden becomes real intoxicated or has the appearance of overly intoxicated, then it might be a sign that they have had something slipped into their drink," Herrman said.

A designated non-drinker is important to have around so that those who have become unconscious or sick are taken care of and don't fall into the hands of strangers.

"The main thing is to use a lot of common sense," Herrman said.

Herrman said students should be aware that some people go on spring break trips to prey on college students.

"Always be conscious of your surroundings and always be cautious of anything that is personal to you," he said.

"When you're out and about look alert, be alert. Walk with a purpose, stand tall, be confident. Know that safety is in numbers. If you have any feelings, trust them."

Endowments create 2 new scholarships for finance students, Labette graduates

Two endowments totaling $60,000 will fund two new scholarships for K-State students.

Mike and Sheila Sanders of Overland Park, Kan., established the George W. and Gladys A. Marvel Scholarship Fund and the Sanders Finance Scholarship.

The Marvel Fund will provide scholarships for students from Labette County. The award will be given annually to a freshman and a sophomore from Labette County High School. Students in any curriculum of study are eligible.

This scholarship was established in honor of Mike Sanders' grandparents.

"They were very proud of the county, the high school and the people there. They are very supportive of education in any way, shape or form, and it's just something I have always wanted to do," Mike Sanders said.

The Sanders scholarship will be awarded by the Department of Finance Scholarship Committee in addition to the $15,000 to $20,000 they give out each April.

The scholarship will be awarded for a student's senior year. To be considered, the student must be a finance major with a 3.5 or higher grade point average.

"I really blossomed at K-State, and they did a terrific job. It's just a little token of my appreciation," Sanders said.

Sanders has also given back to K-State by serving on the College of Business' Department of Finance.

"Ever since joining he has expressed a lot of desire and willingness to help in whatever way he can," said Ali Fatemi, head of the Department of Finance.

"One of the issues that we have been trying to address over the years is to put in place additional scholarships. His support has been so helpful over the years in so many ways and now in the form of this scholarship. He is very down to earth and a very likable individual. He has a lot of love for K-State."

Sanders graduated from K-State in 1980 with a bachelor of science degree in finance. He is the CFO/Treasurer of Tilden Corp., in Lenexa, Kan.

Nike corporation's profits decline again; company hurt by high prices, swoosh status

BEAVERTON, Ore. — Nike just isn't doing it anymore.

After spending millions to put its swoosh logo on sports stars from Michael Jordan to Tiger Woods and enjoying annual growth of 35 percent in the past three years, the shoe manufacturer has hit a wall.

Nike announced a 69-percent drop in profits Wednesday, the second-straight quarterly decline, and said it would lay off 1,600 workers.

The setbacks are the latest for a company hurt by the Asian crisis, a glut of high-priced shoes lingering on store shelves, and a growing sentiment among America's youth that the ubiquitous swoosh is no longer cool.

"Nike kind of overswooshed the market," said Brenda Gail, who follows the company at Merrill Lynch in New York. "There was too much sameness in products. Consumers got bored."

What started out in the 1970s as a rebellious upstart, with chairman Phil Knight selling his waffle-soled running shoes out of the back of his car, has become a $9 billion-a-year behemoth.

But the company has become viewed by many shoe-buying teens as a synonym for corporate America, and their views are beginning to show up on the bottom line.

Nike said its third-quarter profits were down to $73.1 million from $237.1 million a year ago — a drop per share from 80 cents to 25 cents — while global footwear revenues were down 16 percent and future orders were down 9 percent worldwide.

Nike's biggest hit will be to its 22,000-strong work force, which will be reduced by 7 percent. That will cost the company between $125 million and $175 million in severance pay, buyouts and pension plans, but Knight expressed confidence that the layoffs will leave Nike "leaner and more competitive."

Clinton administration tries to defend Bosnia mission with no pullout deadline

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Clinton administration told a dubious Congress on Wednesday it had a legal right to keep thousands of American soldiers on peacekeeping duty in Bosnia without a pullout deadline and asked for nearly $2.5 billion to finance the operation through September 1999.

Within hours, the House voted 225-193 against a hotly disputed resolution that would have forced President Clinton to withdraw U.S. troops from Bosnia or get permission from Congress to leave them there.

Defense Secretary William Cohen and Secretary of State Madeleine Albright defended the peacekeeping operation as constitutional in testimony before the House National Security Committee.

Cohen said the troops in Bosnia-Herzegovina, overseeing a 1995 settlement arranged by the United States to end a 3 1/2-year ethnic war, were unlikely to face hostile fire.

The defense secretary acknowledged it would have been politically wise to urge Congress to approve a resolution supporting the U.S. military involvement in the former Yugoslavia. But the troops in Bosnia, which he said would be reduced from 8,500 to 6,900, were not in harm's way.

First Lady announces plans for museum noting historical contributions of women

WASHINGTON, D.C. — First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton, announcing plans for a national women's museum, said Wednesday that women have made significant contributions to history despite the daunting challenges they have faced.

Clinton unveiled plans for the Women's Museum in Dallas, the first national museum to highlight the achievements of women. She likened the struggle of women to a statue of a woman coming out of a cactus, which graces the facade of the historical building where the museum will be housed.

"The woman coming out of a cactus ... I think somehow sums up a woman's life to me," Clinton said to applause and laughter. "There will be lots of stories of lots of women who may have stepped on a few or had a few thrust at them, but kept on going time and time again."

Clinton said it is important to highlight a history of women's achievements that has received short shrift in American schools.

"I hope that all of us know that the struggle is far from over" to ensure that men and women have an equal opportunity to pursue their goals, Clinton said, adding that the museum will "help ensure that the struggle and the history of the struggle is told and continues."

The $25 million, 70,000-square-foot museum is scheduled to open in October 2000 in Dallas' Fair Park.

Pentagon accused of wasteful spending, failing to shop competitively for parts

WASHINGTON, D.C. — More news from the home of the $640 toilet seat: The Pentagon's watchdog said Wednesday that a new purchasing system designed to save money produced millions of dollars in overpriced spare parts, including a $76 screw and a $714 electrical bell.

Inspector General Eleanor Hill, whose job it is to police for waste and fraud at the Defense Department, said two audits found that the problem wasn't caused by contractor gouging seen in past abuses but by Pentagon errors.

She said that while employing a new purchasing system similar to that used in the commercial sector, Pentagon buyers failed to drive a hard bargain, neglected to find parts that were available from competitors for lower prices, and bought large quantities of parts without getting bulk discounts.

"Department of Defense procurement approaches were poorly conceived, badly coordinated and did not result in the government getting good value for the prices paid both for commercial and noncommercial items," Hill told a Senate Armed Services subcommittee.

"We found considerable evidence that the Department of Defense had not yet learned how to be an astute buyer in the commercial marketplace," she said.

Safety shadows other spring break concerns

A little common sense goes a long way, and during spring break it's the ticket to having a good time and getting home safely.

Almost all students are on the road at some point during spring break, so in addition to defensive driving habits, precaution and planning could make a big difference.

If you're going on a long road trip, be sure to have a spare tire, tools, a cellular phone, water and other conveniences just in case the car breaks down.

Also, know a little something about the area you are visiting just in case you have to make an emergency stop.

The universal 911 emergency phone number is easy enough to remember, but try to line up someone to call in case the situation is less drastic.

Spring break is often a time of experimentation and freedom from parents and routine. However, it's not a time to abandon all responsibility.

Before getting tattoos and body piercing, think about all the ramifications. Gather information and make decisions wisely.

If you choose to have sex, use protection.

A great part of spring break festivities includes meeting new people and making friends. Don't get too caught up in the moment.

If you choose to drink, plan for transportation home and keep track of all open containers.

Although men can also become the targets for victimization, women especially should trust their instincts. If a situation feels uncertain or unsafe, get out.

Personal safety and health is paramount, but keep a watchful eye on credit cards and personal items.

Don't forget to bring your health insurance card and allergy bracelets.

If you're going away for the week, make sure family or close friends know where you'll be and have someone collect mail and newspapers at your Manhattan home.

For graduating seniors, this is a final spring break. It might also be your last chance to spend a week with family and loved ones before your real job determines your vacation time.

No matter where your chosen location is, make time to relax and have fun. Just be responsible.

Campus crosswalks present life-threatening dilemma

The following is a true account of an incident two weeks ago on Thursday night on Denison Avenue near Goodnow Hall:

A puddle of blood surrounded her head as she lay in a fetal mass in the center of the road. In the bright red blood, I noticed what appeared to be a tooth, but was not. Her gum had been knocked from her mouth. A backpack and sandals were strewn around the car. I struggled to examine her face in the dim light.

Amidst her wails of pain, I gently secured her legs onto the stretcher. As I clinched her right leg, I could feel a break, possibly many. The bone shifted and bent as I picked it up.

The sedan's windshield revealed an impact area the size of a basketball on the driver's side. A young woman sat in the passenger seat with her feet in the street. She cried and gasped for breath.

A huddled group in the grass convened to comfort the apparent driver. Presumably, she wished this could all be a bad dream.

Unfortunately, it was and is reality. For those involved that Thursday night, it will be a day not easily forgotten. This is an incident, however, that could have been easily prevented.

Driver and pedestrian carelessness contributed its part to this mess, but the bulk of the blame falls upon the university.

Near-accidents on campus are not a new phenomenon, but one that has been obviously ignored by the administration. We can find money to expand Hale Library and Durland Hall, but apparently there is not enough to install adequate lighting at pedestrian crosswalks. Take some cash from Parking Services — my tickets alone could fund the project.

The entire system has flaws. North Manhattan Avenue is a turkey shoot rather than a safe area to cross. It is a four-lane road with a speed limit of 30 mph. I, myself, have come too close to hitting someone on that road. Either a crosswalk light is installed, or the zebra stripes need to be taken up. Someone will die on that street in the future if nothing is done. Mark my words.

Elementary schools have blinking lights and a 20 mph speed limit during school hours. Why don't we? Drivers are free to fly down Denison or North Manhattan avenues. Even while traveling the speed limit, it is difficult to stop for a rogue jaywalker. I play God with someone else's life every time I drive through campus before noon.

The Wildcat needs to be changed to the Dodger. For the love of God, stay on the sidewalks and cross only at designated areas. Pedestrians have become too eager to end their short college careers by jumping in front of my car. The other day, I almost hit four guys. None were on a crosswalk. I stop for the posted areas, but it is too difficult to anticipate if pedestrians will jump in front of speeding traffic. Point being, you are fair game if you can't cross at crosswalks. I don't want to be the player with the most points in the end.

Campus roads such as Mid Campus Drive, Lovers Lane and even Claflin Road in front of Umberger Hall need to be closed during certain hours of the school day. They are impassable and extremely dangerous.

Lights need to be installed so crosswalks and individuals using them are visible. Although Mindy Hines had been knocked 10 feet away from the crosswalk, I couldn't make out her figure until I was almost upon her. The current halogen street lamps are sadly ineffective.

The crosswalks on North Manhattan and Denison avenues need to be removed, or a blinking light should be installed to slow traffic. City planning really has fallen behind.

These are obvious hazards that have been left basically unaddressed for too long. Someone will die here if nothing is done. Luckily, that person won't be Mindy, but it might be you. If you are not the pedestrian, then perhaps you'll be the driver facing involuntary manslaughter charges.

This situation is a time-bomb waiting to explode. Mindy and others involved received a taste of it last Thursday. My best wishes for a quick recovery for Mindy Hines.

I also want to express my concern for the driver and passenger involved in the accident. Although not physically injured, their grief was evident while I was on the scene.

I hope I never have to meet anyone on campus this way again.

ACHTUNG, BABY!

German post-secondary system is beginning to look more like American system.

Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels are probably making elbow room for themselves, preparing for the day when their collective indignation requires them to roll over. That day is a certain eventuality. It is difficult to predict exactly when, but anytime in the next 20 to 25 years is a reasonable estimate. Although it's difficult to predict the date of their cryptic contortions, the day is easy to pinpoint: It'll be the day that the German Bundestag completes the conversion of Germany's state-run university system into a free-wheeling, no-holds-barred capitalistic system.

For many years, Germany has supported — both East and West maintained similar systems that have now merged — a state-run system of universities and technical schools that has provided many students a convenient refuge from the working world. To attend a university one needs to earn an Abitur, which is essentially the equivalent of a high school diploma, but requires that the student has taken several honors-level classes during high school. This process limits the pool of potential university students somewhat, much like a universal American requirement of a 25 ACT score would limit the pool of American students slightly but not to the point of exclusivity. For those who don't earn an Abitur, or for those who earn an Abitur but seek more career-oriented training, technical schools are an option.

Once one gained admittance, however, things diverged even more from any parallel to the American model. First, government subsidization of the system meant the student paid a health insurance fee each semester and bought books, but tuition was essentially non-existent. Second, many students soon decided they enjoyed the student lifestyle and spent endless semesters earning a degree. Stories abound of undergraduates spending seven years earning the equivalent of a bachelor's degree. And why not? If one could avoid paying rent by attending the nearby university and living at home, school became a great place to hide until the job market in one's particular field solidified or one decided what to do in life.

Furthermore, with the price being so right, certain fields became over-represented, hurting the earning potential of graduates and stretching the ability of the universities to teach all the students interested in those fields. A central administration was established to meter out the most sought-after slots, dictating to students and universities alike which students would be allowed to attend and which students would need to choose another major.

Not surprisingly this system is slowly falling by the wayside. Last February the Bundestag decided to extend more authority to the member schools and undertook several reforms intended to shore up the sagging system that had seen a significant drop in the number of foreign applicants and had become unaffordable for a nation still attempting to forge a unified nation out of two disparate former republics. Still locked in significant debate is the issue of whether universities should be allowed to raise student fees or not. (Half a world away, yet the issues are the same.)

One of the key components of this reform movement is allowing the universities the freedom to select at least 20 percent of their incoming students according to methods established by the individual universities, including personal interviews. This reform will allow each university to begin to seek its own fortune by searching out the brightest students and enticing them to enroll. Another new regulation will limit students to nine semesters enrolled in one major.

Both reforms will help pave the road to a more competitive educational system rooted in a capitalist foundation, bringing to an end the more socialist system in place now. Many things in life are cruel necessities, and these reforms fit the bill. It's difficult to imagine a system operating successfully for an indefinite period when market forces are disconnected by such a large degree from the decision-making process.

In the long term, it is beneficial for students to be allowed the freedom to choose a career that will be personally satisfying. However, many criteria are used by students to judge satisfaction. For many, financial security equals satisfaction and decisions are made accordingly, but for other students, future earnings play absolutely no role in the process of choosing a future career. While one might not be willing to base a value judgment on this fact, it becomes important in the opinionless world of government balance sheets.

A society needs good plumbers and philosophers, or neither its theories nor its pipes will hold water, right? A nation also needs societal members to graduate with skills that help it pay its bills, maintain a reasonable balance of trade and pursue economic growth, especially if it is subsidizing the educational system.

Will Germany ever become a nation where high school juniors and seniors receive hundreds of pieces of mail from colleges and universities seeking prospective students, like American high school students? Probably not. But it is interesting that despite the strong reputation of the German system of high school education, the German post-secondary system is beginning to look more and more like the American system. It's inevitable the reforms begun now will not be the end of the transformation.

How long will it be before German high school students are required not just to earn a diploma, but also required to take standardized college entrance exams and write personal statements?

Maybe only Marx and Engels know.

READERSwrite

Reader calls columnist loud, obnoxious jerk

Editor,

Well, well, well. Russell Fortmeyer has been at the keyboard again. Isn't it a wonderful, uplifting experience to read his words?

I certainly think so.

You know, Fortmeyer, why don't we sit back and take a harsh look at a couple of other people?

My name is Paul English. I am a student leader. I have a variety of different titles, most of them revolving around organizations of the place I live. The past four years, I have remained involved and active in a number of different organizations.

By all accounts I get the job done. I am also, by most accounts, a loud-mouthed, arrogant, obnoxious jerk that is both controversial and confrontational. People have reported to dread my involvement in an organization because of the very style with which I approach doing things. All regardless of how much I might accomplish.

You see, the people who place themselves in VOLUNTEER organizations do so to get something done.

In fact, I don't know of any of the people or organizations that you mention that have not been in service because they want to see things changed for the better. Service. Change. Better. These are things you have ridiculed.

Well, let's talk about Fortmeyer. You see, I don't know you personally, but I have been reading your drivel for the past four years now.

In fact, every time I see your picture, I am prompted to do one of two things for the same reason.

I can either read the crap you are whining about and get pissed off about how much I disagree with you, or I can disregard your words because I know I will disagree with you.

Who cares about the architectural layout of every building on campus because you don't think it is not aesthetically pleasing? Of course, there are your "movie reviews." Five years ago you wrote a review about "The Man Without a Face." I thank you for writing this because it gave me the impetus to write my first letter to the editor to say how much I disagreed with you. Since then, I have had to simply write off what you write as your typical gibberish.

As a journalist, do you see your job as a service to the people or simply a pulpit to spread your opinion? Your words appearing on the opinion page lead me to believe that the things you have to say about those few who are willing to step forward and try to make a difference are your opinion.

Seeing that you are as much the loud-mouthed, obnoxious jerk as I am (and it takes one to know one), why don't you learn a little tact, shut up and sit down? No one wants to hear it.

Thanks for the time to express my opinion.

Oklahoma athletics director resigns after 19 months on job

NORMAN, Okla. — Steve Owens resigned abruptly Wednesday as Oklahoma's athletics director, just 19 months after taking the job. He cited personal reasons.

"The year and a half I have spent as athletic director have been a tremendous learning experience for me personally," Owens said in the letter of resignation he submitted to university President David Boren.

"However, the last six months have been enormously difficult for me and my family, and have given me a different perspective on my priorities."

He said the job required someone who could give a long-term commitment to the department.

"In fairness to Sooner athletes, staff and fans, I believe it is in the best interest of all to step aside at this time and find the person to take the athletic programs into the year 2000," Owens said.

Boren accepted the resignation, which is effective immediately. He said he would name an interim athletics director on Thursday and begin a nationwide search for Owens' replacement.

NBA ROUNDUP

Hornets 111, Jazz 85

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Utah's 11-game winning streak ended Wednesday night when Glen Rice scored 26 points, and the Charlotte Hornets roughed up Karl Malone and the Jazz in a 111-85 victory.

Charlotte made a season-high 61 percent from the field, including 11-for-15 by Rice, who was battling the lingering effects of the flu.

The Hornets won for the 12th time in 13 games by keeping the Jazz to 37-percent shooting, more than 11 percent below their league-leading average.

Malone missed six of his first seven shots, got into foul trouble and then got scratched across the eyes when David Wesley tried to block a shot late in the second quarter. Malone, who played the second half with noticeable swelling and redness around both eyes, finished with 17 points on six-for-15 shooting.

Utah lost forward Antoine Carr and Coach Jerry Sloan in the second quarter. Carr limped off with a strained right hamstring with 1:14 left and did not return. Sloan was ejected after he came onto the court to argue with the officials after Malone's injury.

Heat 94, Grizzlies 91

MIAMI — Alonzo Mourning scored 26 points, and Dan Majerle scored four points in the final 70 seconds as Miami beat Vancouver.

Tim Hardaway had 23 points and 11 assists for the Heat, who moved within a half game of idle Indiana for the second-best record in the Eastern Conference. Miami has won 19 of its past 24 games.

Shareef Abdur-Rahim scored 21 points, and Bryant Reeves had 20 for the Grizzlies, who have lost five straight and 13 of their past 14.

76ers 104, Pistons 96

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Allen Iverson scored a season-high 38 points and former Piston Theo Ratliff added 18 points and 10 rebounds to help the Philadelphia 76ers defeat Detroit.

The Sixers overcame 31 points and nine rebounds from Grant Hill to win for the fourth time in five games. Another former Piston, Aaron McKie, had 12 points, eight rebounds and eight assists for Philadelphia.

Joe Dumars scored 18 points for Detroit, which rallied after trailing by 18 points in the first half.

Spurs 92, Timberwolves 76

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. — Tim Duncan had 20 points and 11 rebounds, and the San Antonio Spurs kept the Minnesota Timberwolves to a season-low point total.

Avery Johnson scored 22 points for San Antonio, which has won nine of its past 12 games. David Robinson finished with 15 points after entering the fourth quarter zero-of-nine from the field.

Robinson didn't connect on his first field goal until he hit a short jumper with 10:45 remaining. He scored 12 points in the final quarter and finished the game three-of-12 from the field.

Kevin Garnett had 16 points and 10 rebounds for Minnesota, but had only two points in the second half.

Suspended Warrior Spewell charged with reckless driving

MARTINEZ, Calif. — Suspended basketball star Latrell Spewell was surprised that charges were filed against him Wednesday in connection with a car crash that injured two people, his attorney said.

The Golden State guard, suspended for attacking Warriors coach P.J. Carlesimo, faces 30 days in jail on the misdemeanor charge of reckless driving, filed Wednesday by the Contra Costa County District Attorney's Office.

"Spewell is surprised and disappointed by the District Attorney's action, but he steadfastly maintains he is innocent of criminal wrongdoing," attorney John Burris said. "He sincerely regrets the accident."

Burris said Spewell would not comment on the charges while the case is pending.

Spewell is accused of injuring two people after driving 90 mph and slamming his car into another vehicle as he tried to swerve back onto a freeway from an exit lane.

YANA DORODNOVA IS RANKED NO. 63 IN THE NATION, BUT COULD JUMP HIGHER AFTER BEATING THE NO. 7 AND NO. 40 PLAYERS IN THE PAST TWO WEEKS. HER ONLY LOSS THIS SEASON CAME TO NO. 3 SANDY SUREEPHONG OF TEXAS.

STORY BY DAN CATALDI • PHOTO BY CLIF PALMBERG

Last year at this time, Yana Dorodnova was battling injuries that caused her tennis game to suffer.

This year is a different story, however, as she was named the Big 12 Conference women's tennis player of the week on Tuesday.

This award follows an outstanding week in which she knocked off two undefeated players.

The week started against BYU and the No. 7 player in the nation, Holly Parkinson. Dorodnova had little trouble upsetting the favored Parkinson, winning in straight sets, 6-4, 6-2.

Dorodnova then took on No. 40 Zana Zlebnik of Texas Tech and beat her 6-3, 6-2.

These wins moved Dorodnova to a 10-1 mark on the year with a 3-1 conference record.

Her lone defeat of the season came at the hands of Sandy Sureephong of Texas, the No. 3 player in the country.

The season started out promising when Dorodnova played well during the fall. She believed she could play at a high level, and she has delivered.

"I wanted to have my best year," Dorodnova said. "But this exceeds my expectations so far."

Dorodnova has beaten four nationally ranked opponents this season and is ranked No. 63. However, that ranking was set before her recent victories over Parkinson and Zlebnik.

"She has beaten every player other than (Sureephong) that has stepped on the court with her in the No. 1 position," K-State coach Steve Bietau said. "And I don't care how bad teams are, everybody's got one girl that can play."

Last year, Dorodnova started the season strong before badly spraining her ankle and partially tearing ligaments, which left her on crutches. While recovering from that injury, she mildly sprained her other ankle.

However, Bietau said those injuries, while a setback at the time, might have made her season this year.

He said because she was so close to having a great season last year before the injuries, she might have wanted to play better this year.

But Dorodnova credits her success this season to her relaxing during matches. She is playing with less pressure than ever before.

"This is my last year and there is not as much pressure on me because I don't think about the future," Dorodnova said.

Also, Bietau suggested a significant change to her game. The thought was that her game couldn't improve to the next level without changing in some fashion, so she started attacking the net and getting more aggressive, a style Bietau said he believes fits her best.

"She is almost six feet tall, she's got a big serve, she's got long arms so she covers the net really well, and she's got good reflexes at the net," Bietau said.

The addition of first-year assistant coach Robert Novotny also has helped Dorodnova's game, Dorodnova said.

"He looks at my game with a fresh eye," Dorodnova said, before admitting she lost to him in practice earlier in the season while winning only one game. "He sees so much stuff that I can't possibly see and that Coach Bietau maybe got used to a little bit."

While Dorodnova clearly has excelled at singles, she also has played well at doubles. She is teamed with Lena Pilipchak, and the duo has lost only one match this season, also to Texas. The duo has wins over some ranked teams and hope to have a chance to qualify for the NCAA championships.

But Dorodnova now has the NCAA singles tournament on her mind as she continues to take care of business on the court. However, no matter how well she does this season, she said this will be her last year of competitive tennis.

She is working on her degree in management information systems and plans to graduate next year. Dorodnova, who has a 3.9 grade point average, said she hopes to go to graduate school after she gets her degree.

"The really neat thing about Yana is that she's excited about the way she is playing," Bietau said. "And she has not played better than this at any time in her three years here."

THE REALLY NEAT THING ABOUT YANA IS THAT SHE'S EXCITED ABOUT THE WAY SHE IS PLAYING. AND SHE HAS NOT PLAYED BETTER THAN THIS AT ANY TIME IN HER THREE YEARS HERE.

Slight improvements in Royals' operating procedures could raise attendance, upgrade annual victory total

Baseball season is nearly here again. For Kansas City fans, that causes little more than a yawn. Sure, everybody will be wearing their Royal blue on April 7, dubbed Kansas City Day to coincide with the home opener, but by tax day, baseball will be out of the collective consciousness of Kansas Citians.

Something will probably come up, like maybe Marty Schottenheimer will get a new dog. People will be lining up like Russians at a bakery to win the "Name-Marty's-dog-and-get-a-ticket-in-the-next-to-last-row-for-the-Falcons'-preseason-game-in-the-rain contest."

Regardless, baseball is what Kansas City used to be all about, but the finicky fans will not show up for a team that finished in last place. Attendance is sagging every year, and the team needs fans in the seats to get good again, but it needs to get good again to get fans in the seats. It's a catch-22.

The Royals at least should have a competitive club this year, but they should have the past two seasons, too. I have come up with some ideas to get more fans in the seats and have Kansas City become a two-sport town.

Suit George Brett up again. Ask 10 Kansas Citians to name a player on the Royals, and eight of them will say No. 5. He is still a member of the organization. If he suits up, undoubtedly people will think he is still playing and show up at the ballpark.

Select a team, such as the Chicago White Sox to bean continually. The Sox need a new whipping boy, because the Milwaukee Brewers are now in the National League. The Brewers-White Sox matchups were good for a minimum of three bench-clearing brawls per year. If fans knew there would be violence, they would not miss a single game.

Use Bob Davis for his connections. Along with being the Royals' play-by-play announcer, Davis calls games for KU. While none of us here care, people in Kansas City live and die for KU basketball, because being a fair-weather fan is a prerequisite to living in Kansas City for most. Maybe they will now disown KU, but they are still the best team within five hours, so people will still root for the Jayhawks.

I think Davis can talk Roy Williams into becoming the Royals' new manager. People would flock to the ballpark to see Williams pull the strings. This would make the team win immediately, which would also bring in new fans. They probably would go about 150-12 during the regular season, but get swept in the first round of the playoffs. He would cry and say this was the best bunch of ballplayers he's ever had and apologize for wanting to win the World Series.

Have Jerry Springer day. Whether they admit it or not, everybody loves to watch the Jerry Springer Show. Invite Springer, the Famous Chicken and KC Wolf to have a show during the seventh-inning stretch. Sluggers-r-r can duke it out with the other mascots, and attendance will go through the roof. Nothing beats a good mascot fight, and as Wildcats know, it's a great sight to see feathers fly.

Slight uniform change. Change the hats to a reddish color with a white and yellow arrowhead on it, with an interlocking KC on them. Enough people would be confused and think it's a Chiefs game, increasing attendance dramatically.

Trade for Ken Griffey Jr. Sure, the Royals would have to give up the entire roster, George Toma and $80 million, but more people would watch Griffey do a crossword puzzle on the pitchers' mound with his hat backward and crooked like a 5-year-old than will watch the Royals team play all season.

Let people swim in the outfield fountains.

Show Cardinals' games on the JumboTron. Mark McGwire can hit the ball a really long way, and people don't want to miss one of his blasts. Also, with many fans in Missouri split between the two teams, they can watch both and not miss any action.

Seriously, the Royals run a first-class organization. They treat their fans well, and the players are good guys. They have some talent and can compete for a playoff spot.

After all, nobody thought the San Francisco Giants would compete last year, and they won the National League West. Any team with a pitching staff as talented and deep as the Royals' can stay competitive.

Signup deadline nears for 9 intramural sports

JOHN STOUS
Kansas State Collegian

The next group of intramural sports at K-State won't begin until after spring break, but the deadline for the next nine intramural sports is 5 p.m. today.

Softball, three-wall handball doubles, three-wall racquetball doubles, tennis doubles, horseshoes doubles, badminton doubles, three-on-three basketball, triples volleyball and around-the-world are the sports offered at this time.

Six of the nine offered are split into men's, women's and co-rec divisions. The remaining three are men's and women's divisions.

Softball is expected to be the largest sport and is the last team sport offered this semester in intramural sports.

"Last year we had about 300 softball teams," said Steve Martini, associate director of Recreational Services. "We should be within 10 teams of where we were last year."

Martini said other sports were expected to have good numbers as well.

"We have an ideal intramural setting since we are only about three miles from campus. It is not too hard to get out here," he said. "It also helps that we are a smaller college town and have the strong greek participation in our program. Greeks actually make up the bulk of our program."

The only change from last year in the intramural sports offered at this time is the softball fields, which are just to the north of Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, have been completed with new backstops and dirt infills.

"The new infields are really nice," said Ron Miller, assistant director for Recreational Services. "We also want to get some benches and bleachers at the fields, too, but we just don't have the money right now."

The new infields are made of a crushed clay surface, one that is used by many city recreational programs, Martini said.

"This will be a new experience for us," he said. "The infields, which can get hard, really shouldn't harden up on us if we have a normal spring and get enough rain to keep them soft."

Need more info? If you have questions regarding intramural sports, call Recreational Services at 532-6980.

BILL MCSHANE OF ULTIMATE FAKEBOOK PERFORMS AT THE WELCOME BACK CONCERT LAST AUGUST IN CITY PARK. THE BAND CAME IN SECOND IN A CONTEST SPONSORED BY MENTOS TO WIN A SPOT PERFORMING AT THE OGDEN THEATRE IN DENVER TO A WORLDWIDE AUDIENCE VIA THE WORLD WIDE WEB.

the ultimate freshmakers

Ultimate Fakebook to perform at Web-casted Mentos show

Manhattan's own Ultimate Fakebook has garnered a reputation as one of the best live acts in the area, and its recent accomplishment mirrors that.

In February, UFB was part of a contest sponsored by Mentos to win a spot performing at the Ogden Theatre in Denver to a worldwide audience via the World Wide Web.

People could log onto the Mentos Web site and vote for four out of eight bands to play the show.

The band came in second, behind Austin, Texas, ska-punk band the Impossibles, and Colorado-area bands Zuba and Chief Broom.

"Two weeks before the contest was over, we were in first, so we kinda let up a little bit, which we probably shouldn't have done. We figured at that point, all we needed to do was be in first, second, third or fourth," drummer Eric Melin said.

"We didn't pester people as much as we used to," he said.

Melin said the band is excited to play in Denver.

"It's going to be awesome, because we've got friends that live in Colorado," he said.

Not only will Ultimate Fakebook play in front of hundreds of people who might know nothing about the band, but also potentially millions of people will watch the show live on the Web.

"I'm not going to be that nervous, unless there's like cameras swinging around and big (lighting and camera) rigs in my face, which I don't think they're gonna have," Melin said.

Melin said he had experience with that sort of thing, when his former band, Truck Stop Love, played a Tom Petty tribute concert at the House of Blues that was broadcast on "ABC In Concert."

"I've had that happen once before, and it was very disconcerting. I almost pissed my pants before we went on stage."

"But this, I'm not gonna be too nervous about it, I don't think, because I don't have a computer, so I don't really understand the whole thing. I can't really grasp the concept of it," he said.

Melin also said he doesn't really know what happens after the band plays the show, but he is now a Mentos eater for life.

"I'll eat Mentos, especially if they give us money."

"They can use our song in ads, anything. I don't care."

Fakebook nominated for 5 Kansas City-area music awards

Ultimate Fakebook has been nominated for five Klammies, not to be confused with the Grammys.

The Klammies are awards sponsored by Kansas City alternative weekly paper, Pitch Weekly, and they honor the Kansas City and Lawrence music scenes.

Fakebook is nominated for band of the year, best alternative band, album of the year and song of the year, and vocalist Bill McShane is up for best male vocalist.

Drummer Eric Melin said it is an honor to be nominated, but some people might question why UFB is nominated so many times.

"I feel like a lot of people are going to think, 'Who the hell are these guys? Where did they come from? Why did they get nominated?' not knowing that I've been doing this for almost 10 years, and Bill and Nick have been doing it for about six or seven. I think everybody's wondering why we didn't get nominated for best new band," he said.

Nominations were made by Kansas City press, radio stations and booking agents.

Melin said the album of the year nomination means the most to him and the band.

"We worked really, really hard to make it so there wasn't one crappy song on the record," he said.

He said UFB's chances aren't too good.

"I don't think we're going to win any of them. I think if we win one, it might be for maybe song of the year, because the other people in that category, minus Sufferbus, didn't have very memorable songs on the radio," Melin said.

"Ours got played every five minutes, to the point where people were telling me that they were calling up telling them to take it off the air and put a new one on," he said.

People can vote by picking up a copy of Pitch Weekly and voting with the ballot inside.

Ballots must be sent to the Pitch Weekly offices and must be received by 5 p.m. March 27.

The only place to pick up Pitch Weekly in Manhattan is at Streetside Records, so it is difficult for people to vote, Melin said.

"I think the people in Manhattan are gonna be kinda screwed on it, because the Pitch doesn't distribute to Manhattan anymore."

"They only distribute to Streetside by way of this guy who picks it up Thursday in Kansas City and drives it to Manhattan and drops it off on Saturday at Streetside," Melin said.

He said bands in Lawrence or Kansas City have it easy when it comes to the voting.

"The Pitch is everywhere. You can go into any record store, bookstore, bar and see a Pitch, take it home and send it in for your favorite band. And, chances are, if you're from Kansas City or Lawrence, it's not Ultimate Fakebook, so we're screwed."

Lunchbag Theatre Productions to present 'Extensions'

TODD PACEY
Kansas State Collegian

During grade school lunch, someone — it could have been you — laughed so hard milk came out that child's nose.

There is a chance this will reoccur this morning at the Purple Masque Theatre in East Stadium. Lunchbag Theatre Productions will present "Extensions," a comedy written by Murray Schisgal, at 11:30 a.m.

The production, directed by Karl Rutherford, graduate student in speech, will be performed by Tyree Kimber, senior in theater, and Brenda Stanton, graduate student in theater.

Lew Shelton, associate professor of speech communication, theater and dance, said the premise of the play relies on the phone. Two vaudeville performers, Bob and Betsy Abbot, are desperately awaiting employment. Shelton said the phone does eventually ring, but the news from the calls gets progressively worse.

Lunchbag Theatre Productions is a result of two classes — practice in directing or acting theater classes. Students enrolled in the classes take part in at least one Lunchbag production.

"It's also a way to broaden your horizons. They have chosen very interesting and diverse works to perform this semester. It's fascinating to see how different people act and direct these plays," said Kimber, who plays Bob Abbot.

Stanton, who plays Betsy Abbot, said the productions give students a chance to learn.

"This will provide us with an invaluable lesson about work and compromise, and it's fun," she said.

The show lasts about half an hour and is free to the public. In keeping with the theme of Lunchbag Theatre Productions, those in attendance are encouraged to bring a lunch.

Mann, Macklin defeat opponents in runoff, prepare to take office

During the campaign, Mann said one significant focus of his administration would be improving academic advising at K-State. Other ideas included the book-swapping system, which would help students trade textbooks with other students instead of paying retail prices. Mann and Macklin said they also will try to create a parking permit for the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

"We're going to start working on advising, the book-swapping system and the Rec parking permit," he said. "We'll also work on filling our cabinet and funding Hale Library."

Jason Lacey, junior in mechanical engineering, said he was glad Mann and Macklin's campaign was positive.

"I'm really glad the campaign went the way it did. We kept it positive. Everyone got something positive out of it," he said.

Lacey said the organization behind Mann's campaign was one of the reasons it was successful.

"It's been a long, hard campaign. Tracey is one of the most organized people. He's been working on this since November," he said.

"It's amazing what can happen when you get a whole bunch of people working together."

Macklin said the campaign was rewarding.

"The entire campaign and all our friends, it was just really an awesome experience," he said. "We're just thrilled to be able to serve K-State for next year."

Davis, Boomer say life goes on after Mann win

was introduced to a whole new side of life," Davis said.

Bret Glendening, a candidate in last week's general election who endorsed Davis after his loss, said he was disappointed with Wednesday's results, as well.

"I have been disappointed twice in two weeks," he said. "There is nothing we can do but look to the future."

He said he wants Mann and Macklin to look at the issues that were brought up by all five candidates next year.

Chris Van Tyle, another of last week's candidates who endorsed Davis, used Mann and Macklin's campaign slogan to express his wishes.

"I want to make my own K-State statement — I hope they do a better job in office than they did campaigning," he said. "I hope they do what they promise."

Carrie Kessinger, senior in marketing and human resource management and Davis supporter, said she was disappointed in the results of the election.

"They did a really good job, and I wish the rest of the campus could see the kind of leadership they represent," she said.

Bret Michaelis, senior in management, said the campus is not only losing a good president but a university champion in soccer.

"It's too bad," Michaelis said. "He would have made a damn good president."

Bill would even Regents' representation

►SENATE'S VOTE TODAY COULD SILENCE CHARGES OF KU, K-STATE BIAS.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — For years, employees and alumni of other state universities have grumbled that the state Board of Regents favors the University of Kansas and K-State.

Some senators are ready to do something about the complaints.

The Senate Education Committee heard testimony Thursday on a bill that would require the nine-member board to have an alumnus from each of the six state universities.

Chairwoman Barbara Lawrence, R-Wichita, said the committee will discuss and vote today on the bill, which she is sponsoring.

A regent criticized the bill, saying it would make the board parochial.

But a prominent Wichita State University alumnus said it would be only right to have each university represented.

"What's everybody afraid of?" said Don Stephan, owner of a Wichita advertising agency and younger brother of former Attorney General Bob Stephan.

The Senate committee reviewed the bill the same day the House adopted a proposed constitutional amendment to abolish the Board of Regents and create a single Council on Higher Education to oversee state universities, community colleges and vocational-technical schools.

But Rep. Ed McKechnie, D-Pittsburg, said he expects the affiliation of council members to be an issue and the bill before the Senate committee to surface in some form.

The Board of Regents' members are appointed by the governor, and at least one member must live in each of the state's four congressional districts. Also, no two members can live in the same county.

There are no restrictions on how many of one university's alumni can serve on the board.

Six of the nine board members — a two-thirds majority — are KU alumni, including its chairman, Bob Talkington, of Iola.

The disclosure of that information led to an exclamation of surprise from Sen. Pat Ranson, R-Wichita, who testified for the bill.

She said the committee would have heard from regents faculty and officials who support the bill, but they feared offending the regents and some legislators.

"That's very frightening to me, when people who feel strongly are intimidated," Ranson said to the committee.

Regent Bill Docking, of Arkansas City, defended the board. He said the board's members view themselves as advocates for all six universities at once. He said the bill would foster an atmosphere of parochialism.

But Sen. Tim Emert, R-Independence, said to Docking, "Have we ever had an alumnus of Pittsburg State University serve on the board?"

Docking said he did not know.

Sen. Christine Downey, D-Newton, said to him, "I think there's an atmosphere here to at least take notice of. There's some feeling on the part of the four other universities in the state that they're not being heard with the same strength."

Local representatives leery of proposed Board changes

NATE JENKINS
Kansas State Collegian

State Representatives Kent Glasscock and Jeff Peterson said they agreed the proposed change to the Kansas Board of Regents sounds nice but is riddled with problems that could undermine the board's effectiveness.

If the bill passes, an alumnus from each of the six regents universities would be on the board.

Rep. Jeff Peterson, R-Manhattan, said confusion could arise because many people hold degrees from different colleges, and Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, said it could prevent the governor from selecting the most qualified people for the board.

"You have to be very careful about taking away the governor's prerogative in this situation," Glasscock said.

"Where people come from is secondary. You could have a dummy from K-State and a better candidate from Emporia State, but be stuck with taking the K-State person simply because you need to fill the board with alumni from all the universities."

Peterson presented a hypothetical situation of a person with a bachelor's degree from K-State, a master's from KU and a doctorate from Emporia State.

"Now who is that a person an alumnus of?" Peterson asked. "I think that more diverse membership on the board

GIFT OF LIFE

A SMOKE DETECTOR LEAH LLOYD RECEIVED FREE FROM THE POTTAWATOMIE COUNTY HEALTH DEPARTMENT CAN BE CREDITED WITH SAVING HER LIFE. THE 78-YEAR-OLD WESTMORELAND RESIDENT'S HOUSE BURNED IN THE EARLY-MORNING HOURS OF FEB. 27. LLOYD HAD TWO OTHER SMOKE DETECTORS, BUT THOSE BURNED BEFORE THEY COULD WARN HER OF THE FIRE.

County-issued smoke detector proves to be saving grace

ANGELA KISTNER
Kansas State Collegian

In the hours before dawn on Feb. 27, a fire started in the living-room stove-pipe of Leah Lloyd's Westmoreland home as she slept.

There were three smoke detectors, but the one that saved Lloyd's life was the one she had received for free a few weeks earlier from the Pottawatomie County Health Department.

The other two detectors burned before they had a chance to warn her of the fire.

Sitting on the couch in her new living room, Lloyd, 78, told of the early morning fire that stole her memories and almost stole her life.

Lloyd said she was asleep on her couch when she awoke suddenly to the sound of the smoke detector.

"It was four in the morning. I was sleeping on the couch," she said. "I heard the fire alarm and smelled the smoke."

Wearing an oxygen mask to aid her breathing, Lloyd couldn't get too close to the flames.

"I saw the flames and I tried to put it out, but I had my oxygen on," she said.

Lloyd, who lived alone, had no one to help her. She finally went outside in the cold wearing only her night clothes.

"I got outside — no shoes, no nothing," she said.

Remembering that her purse was inside on the back of the couch, Lloyd tried to go back inside, but the heat of the door burnt her hand.

Lloyd said she called for help, but the only people nearby were across the road.

"I called for help, but nobody helped me," she said.

Lloyd's daughter Rieka Gerkin said a man from Olsburg traveling down the road saw Lloyd. He stopped and took her to the fire station and then to the hospital.

Lloyd's eyes glazed over with tears as she remembered the fire. She said she can still see it.

"You don't know until you go through it," she said. "I hope to God I never see another one."

"It was the second one I've been through. When I was 10, I was in one with my grandma," Lloyd said.

The fire took Lloyd's house, but her daughter immediately found her a new place to live.

"I had her in this place the evening of the fire," Gerkin said of Lloyd's new apartment. "I started at 7 a.m. making phone calls. The Red Cross and the community helped out."

Lloyd's apartment is sparsely furnished with things her daughter gave her. Most of Lloyd's belongings were destroyed in the fire.

"All my pictures burned," she said. "Pictures of children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, parents. My dad's picture burned up. I don't have any more."

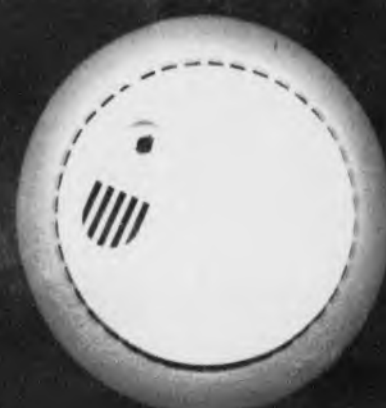

Gerkin said her mother is heartbroken. "A lot of things she lost can't be replaced," she said.

Lloyd said she can remember many of the things that were precious to her that she lost in the fire.

"I had a coffee cup that said 'Grandma' that my grandchildren gave me," she said. "I also had a coffee table my granddaughter made me in woodworking."

"Everything just went."

Lone success gives program solid backing

ANGELA KISTNER
Kansas State Collegian

About 3,200 smoke detectors have been given away in Kansas since January.

One life has been saved.

Leah Lloyd, 78, of Westmoreland, Kan., was the first person saved by a free smoke detector as part of the Kansas Fire Injury Prevention Program.

Beverly Toburen, public health nurse for Pottawatomie County, said many organizations are distributing the smoke detectors throughout Kansas.

"Various health departments, fire departments, parents-as-teachers organizations and home visitation projects are issued smoke detectors to give out to the community," Toburen said.

Toburen said homes that receive the smoke detectors fill out confidential surveys.

"The surveys ask about income, if there are smoke detectors already in the home and knowledge of safety procedures if there was a fire," she said.

Toburen said Lloyd received her smoke detector through the maternal and infant program.

"She doesn't fall into that category, but we knew her name from another source," she said.

Betty Roggenkamp, Pottawatomie County Healthy Start home visitor, said she has given out 85 smoke detectors.

Roggenkamp said she visits homes with new babies to make sure their homes meet certain standards.

"I was trained to check and see if the smoke detectors they had were working," she said. "And to remind them to change the battery at least twice a year."

Roggenkamp said the program has been very successful.

Veterinarians from Japan tour facilities, learn about research studies at K-State

Twenty Japanese veterinarians visited the K-State College of Veterinary Medicine as a way of continuing their education Thursday.

The veterinarians toured the school and listened to four topics of research that have been done or are being completed at K-State.

Dr. Gen Kato, president of the Japanese Animal Hospital Association, said listening to K-State's faculty would be helpful in their practices.

"We all really appreciate K-State doing this for us," he said. "This helps us improve our knowledge and skill to take back to our practices."

Kato said the vets were in the United States representing Japan at the American Animal Hospital Association's meeting in Chicago, which was earlier in the week.

Kato was the founding president of Japan's organization in 1978, five years after he had spent nearly a year in Manhattan.

Interim Dean Neil Anderson was at K-State the first time Kato visited the school in 1973.

"Dr. Kato came to us 25 years ago to improve his clinical skills," he said. "After spending almost a year here, he went home and became more active in improving Japan's national veterinarians organizations. He has done a lot of positive things for his country's science in veterinary medicine."

Kato was the interpreter for Thursday's seminars and said he was tired, but he was still happy to be back at K-State.

"K-State is known worldwide for its veterinary school," he said. "It is always nice to come back to this school."

Bomb blast in Vermont kills teen-ager; mother hospitalized in serious condition

FAIR HAVEN, Vt. — A bomb exploded Thursday at a private home, killing a teen-ager and seriously injuring his mother.

"Right now we are considering it a homicide investigation," state police Sgt. Steve Brown said.

Brown would not comment on reports the bomb was contained in a parcel delivered by United Parcel Service, but police were searching a UPS truck Thursday night.

At about 9 p.m. Thursday, the truck was parked about two miles south of town, with six police cruisers surrounding it, their headlights trained on the truck.

Christopher Marquis, 17, died after being taken to the Rutland Regional Medical Center, spokeswoman Jill Jesso White said. His mother, Sheila Rockwell, 52, was in serious condition, Jesso White said.

According to witnesses, the explosion happened at about 3 p.m. at the home, which is directly behind the police and fire departments.

Fair Haven, a community of about 3,000, is located on the New York state line about 25 miles west of Rutland.

The FBI and the Federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms were heading the investigation. State and local police also were on the scene.

"At this point we're trying to identify what happened," said Nicholas Repasky, the FBI's supervisory agent in Vermont.

Clinton to unveil new policy on Cuba, including reinstatement of direct flights

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Clinton is expected to reinstate direct flights to Cuba and allow U.S.-based exiles to send money home to family and friends, officials said Thursday.

The moves, prompted in part by the January visit to Cuba of Pope John Paul II, were recommended by Secretary of State Madeleine Albright. A formal White House announcement could come as early as today.

As part of the package, Clinton is expected to take steps to end cumbersome procedures for the delivery of medicines to Cuba and also to endorse a legislative proposal to permit increased humanitarian relief to needy Cubans.

Cuban President Fidel Castro has denounced the proposal and said he supports an alternative bill before Congress that would allow the unrestricted sale of food and medicine to Cuba.

U.S. officials, who spoke on the condition that they would not be identified, said the measures are likely to have a beneficial impact on the Roman Catholic Church in Cuba, which is responsible for distribution of humanitarian supplies from the United States.

Judge says high school must reinstate student who ripped teacher on Web page

CLEVELAND — A high school junior suspended for creating a Web site to complain about his band teacher was reinstated by a judge and returned to class Thursday.

Sean O'Brien, 16, even went to band class and played baritone horn for Raymond Walczuk, the teacher described on his Web site as "an overweight middle-aged man who doesn't like to get haircuts" and who favors some students over others.

"It was pretty much as I expected. It seemed like a normal day at school," O'Brien said. "There was no conflict with Mr. Walczuk. I went to band class — we did band things, like practicing music."

O'Brien built his Web site through his home computer. He told some friends and word spread through Westlake High School in suburban Cleveland.

School officials suspended him for 10 days, claiming the site violated a policy that forbids students from showing disrespect to employees.

"We felt there was harm done here," Superintendent Beverly Reep said. "This is cyberspace, and it's the first time we've dealt with something like this."

Federal Judge John M. Manos reinstated O'Brien on Wednesday after eight days of the suspension and ordered the district not to restrict what the teen-ager puts on a Web site set up through his own computer.

Manos' order will be in effect until at least April 3, when a full hearing is scheduled on a lawsuit filed by O'Brien seeking $550,000 in damages from the school for violating his First Amendment rights.

The American Civil Liberties Union of Ohio and O'Brien's lawyers believed the case is the first of its kind regarding a student's free-speech rights on the Internet.

"We say the situation is analogous to Sean talking to his friends in a coffee shop," said his attorney, Kenneth Myers. "Why can't he say something critical of the band teacher? He's on his own time, and he's on his own turf."

WORLDREPORT

U.N. announces selection of 20 diplomats to accompany weapons inspectors in Iraq

GENEVA — The United Nations chose 20 diplomats Thursday to accompany weapons inspectors to sensitive sites in Iraq, fulfilling a key provision of a U.N.-brokered agreement that averted a U.S. military strike on Baghdad.

The team includes representatives from all but three of the U.N. Security Council's 15 members and officials from all five permanent members. The group was ordered to travel to Bahrain this weekend.

Jayantha Dhanapala of Sri Lanka, appointed by U.N. chief Kofi Annan to organize the group, gave no indication when the inspections will begin.

The group will accompany U.N. weapons inspectors to eight Iraqi presidential sites. The action, included in a memorandum of understanding Annan worked out with Iraq on Feb. 23, was agreed upon in response to Iraq's demand that the inspectors show respect for national dignity and sovereignty.

The diplomats won't be trained and will merely ensure that the procedures that Iraq agreed upon are implemented in good faith, Dhanapala said.

"We won't be millstones around anybody's neck," he said.

Dhanapala said at a news conference that the timing of visits will be at the discretion of UNSCOM, the U.N. special commission in charge of the inspections, and the International Atomic Energy Agency.

The diplomatic group is to submit its own report on the visit, but it will be forwarded to Annan via chief arms inspector Richard Butler, who will be able to comment on it if he sees fit, Dhanapala said.

A pool of 56 diplomats was drawn up in New York after 28 countries responded to a call to put forward two candidates each, he said.

Dhanapala said on Thursday he hoped inspections would be carried out within two weeks.

He plans to arrive in Baghdad with Butler on Sunday and said the team of diplomats should arrive shortly afterward.

"I'll be there until next Wednesday, and shortly after I leave, they will start," Butler said ABC's "Good Morning America." He declined to elaborate.

Master plan scrutinized during explanatory forum

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

The new campus master-planning document met with some criticism at Thursday's University Forum on Campus Planning.

The forum, the second of its kind, was organized by the Campus Development Committee to give the campus and community an explanation of how capital improvements are made at K-State. It was also a time for the committee to solicit feedback about its document, "Campus Planning: People, Principles and Process."

Since the last forum in December, the development committee had taken action on the recommendation to hire a campus planning consultant. That recommendation was approved by the administration, and a $500,000 request for funding will be forwarded to the Kansas Board of Regents on April 1.

The forum, moderated by committee chairman Richard Hayter, allowed those in attendance an opportunity to scrutinize the planning document further.

Among the suggestions was a need to address green space as a system and not a loose connection of spaces, the need to incorporate advanced telecommunications concerns into building projects in the early phases of design and to consider the effects of virtual learning on campus development.

Mark Shapiro, head of the architecture department and a vocal critic of the campus planning process, said he was pleased the university has decided to hire a planning consultant to develop a master plan.

"I would hope we could be more proactive about that," Shapiro said, referring to the means of hiring a consultant. "My opinion as my personal expertise is that we cast our net much wider than Kansas."

Laurence Clement, associate professor of landscape architecture, said he would like the planning document to move away from advocating parking and traffic issues.

"We should be working to minimize the dependence on the car," Clement said.

The planning document is seen by the committee as the tool it would use to evaluate new capital projects on campus. The document addresses a number of issues including building, land use, utilities, the charge of the committee and the basic principles of K-State campus planning.

Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning and university architect, presented the university's five-year capital improvements request list that will be made to the regents. Among those projects were the ongoing Fiedler Hall addition to Durland Hall, the planned $6 million renovation of Memorial Stadium, the $15 million grain science project and a $2.5 million meat processing lab.

Faculty, students unleash criticism of design for proposed alumni center

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

Thursday's public presentation of the planned K-State Alumni Center elicited sharp criticism from faculty and students as to the conceptual design's appropriateness for campus.

The faculty and students, nearly all from the College of Architecture, Planning and Design, faulted the center for failing to create urban space, to address the campus and to adequately respond to the site.

Also at issue was the architectural response of the design firm, Wichita-based Gossen Livingston Associates.

The $6 million, 48,000 square foot alumni center is planned to be built on the southwest corner of campus, south of Memorial Stadium. The project is being developed by the private KSU Alumni Association and will be built entirely with private funds. The conceptual design is a three-story limestone structure with pitched roofs and a 54-space parking lot.

The audience's comments followed presentations by KSU Alumni Association president Amy Button Renz and both Bill Livingston and Mac McKee of Gossen Livingston. Livingston and McKee had most recently presented the conceptual design to the Campus Development Committee on March 5.

Last night's forum at the KSU Foundation building was the first time the entire campus has been invited to view the design and make comments.

Mark Shapiro, head of the architecture department, said he was primarily concerned that the design is essentially a suburban strategy for an urban site.

"It cuts the building off from the pedestrian," Shapiro said.

"The essential presentation the building makes is to the vehicle. I read it as an inappropriate strategy for campus."

Shapiro also criticized the traditional architectural approach that was noted by Renz as one of the responses from a feasibility survey of alumni.

That survey, completed last June, indicated alumni expected a comfortable design that was traditional and home-like.

"I think, however, and this is just opinion, it seems to me again this building is going to be part of the campus. I believe the university is morally obliged to present a progressive image," Shapiro said. "I'm hard-pressed to say this building really fits into the campus."

Another concern of many in attendance at the forum was parking. The requirement of 54 parking spots was made by Parking Services.

However, the university planning office and the administration are still considering if other parking arrangements can be made to lessen the encroachment on the site.

The location of the building on the site, which is between the two sides of the stadium and facing Anderson Avenue, also prompted criticism.

"I suspect the building could function as a gateway to the campus rather than a building that embraces Anderson Avenue and the bungalows and gas station across the street," Eugene Kremer, professor of architecture, said.

Kremer also referred to the three-story height of the building and the inclusion of a large north-elevation terrace as a potential problem with a lack of sunlight and a direct north-wind exposure.

"It's not going to be a comfortable space," Kremer said.

Kremer said he suggests a building that opens onto 17th Street to the east and lets the other elevations open onto a garden that could allow the stadium to remain somewhat open visually.

The forum also addressed the city and issues important to the immediate area.

Don Watts, professor of architecture, said the alumni center would fit into a line of activity from the West Stadium parking lot to McCain Auditorium.

"I think you need to get back and see how this building works within the context of five blocks," Watts said. "This should be adding to the life within campus. Right now it's a God-awful mess. This design should present a more coherent way of moving through campus."

Adding some conclusion to the forum, Shapiro called for an advocacy on the part of the KSU Alumni Association of some alternatives to the present conceptual design.

Shapiro said, "Give the architect more freedom and make a better building."

Spring break in Manhattan could be heavenly

If your spring break plans don't include leaving the Manhattan city limits, you might still have the whole world at your fingertips.

Chances are, you can get much accomplished. More than going somewhere, spring break is about much needed rest and relaxation.

Some of your friends might have left for their spring break trips already, but be happy. You have most of the place to yourself.

If you're going to be here all of next week, here are a few things to be grateful for:

1. The really good parking stalls will be open and in all lots. Parking will be plentiful.
2. Professors might distribute extra credit points or information about midterm exams for those attending class today or the Monday after break.
3. There's plenty of time to study for classes and the exams, projects and lengthy papers due immediately after students return from break.
4. You can read every word in the Collegian, from page one to the last classified. Be sure to catch coverage of last night's Student Senate meeting.
5. There will be almost no one competing with you for use of the best computers in the campus labs.
6. Watch every dribble, shot and coach's interview for the NCAA Sweet Sixteen games.
7. Endless television coverage of presidential scandals.
8. Today is a university payday, so buy yourself something nice because you won't be purchasing a plane ticket to the Bahamas or South Padre Island.
9. When partying in Aggieville, the bars

- will be less populated.
10. Almost no distraction while studying at Hale Library.
11. Roommates will be gone, so take advantage of having the house to yourself. Do that pre-move deep-cleaning after a week of eating and sleeping in front of the television.
12. Work on your résumé, and wow all your friends by finding the perfect job before they return.
13. Learn something about Manhattan by breaking free from your routine and exploring the city.

NEWS FLASH: The protester isn't always right

I guess Native Americans have copyrights on grass skirts, drumbeats and the words "native," "chief" and "culture." At least that's what I was led to think when I traversed to the University of Kansas to see the Rock Chalk Revue. But before we get to that, it's important to explain what the Revue is.

Rock Chalk Revue is a philanthropic performance the greek and residence hall communities do every year at KU. Five pairs of fraternities and sororities worked for virtually a semester and a half writing and producing an original short musical. All proceeds go to the United Way of Douglas County.

My friend Carrie's sorority was a participant in this, so I went to see her in action. She warned me that her musical was causing quite a stir among the Native American Student Union, as well as among other students at KU. The directors were asked not to use the aforementioned words. They complied.

The night I went, opening night, there were some students peacefully protesting outside the Lied Center. No big deal. Maybe there was something in the show that could be misconstrued to be racist or sexist, as the protesting students had charged. Either way, the protesters weren't acting like they were protesting outside a Wichita abortion clinic.

Alpha Delta Pi and Lambda Chi Alpha (Carrie's group) were first. Their musical was set in a fictitious land called Weemaway. A group of students from KU went on a field trip there to study the land's culture — oops, I mean community. The people of Weemaway wore grass skirts and bathed in a fountain. It all seemed benign to me.

Toward the end of their number, some guy in the second balcony started screaming things like, "How can you watch this? This is disgusting" and "Your hearts are black." The performers did the professional thing and went on, and the guy was eventually thrown out. And he paid $10 to get in to boot.

We met Carrie after the show, and she immediately asked me if I thought it was racist. I told her no, and she said, "Good. I knew if anyone would know if this was racist, it would be you."

Not that I'm an authority on race relations, but I'd like to think I'm pretty understanding when it comes to issues of race, sex, creed and sexual orientation. And I just, could not understand what would be racist or sexist about their performance. They were depicting a fictitious community and its fictitious inhabitants. Even the fake people were not being demeaned.

Racism and sexism are touchy issues for most people these days, as well it should be.

God offers solutions to confused people searching for answers in superficial world

"There is a way that seems right to a man, but in the end it leads to death." (Proverbs 16:25 NIV)

We are a confused people who can't even agree about right and wrong. We are a lost generation. Figuring out what is important often leaves us wondering how much of our own time has any substantial meaning. You don't believe me?

How much time did you spend deciding what you were going to wear this morning? The right shoes and the right socks. Every article has to fit a specific fashion. And how much attention do we pay to our hair? (OK, for some of you, apparently not very much. You're excused from this analogy.) Video games, Internet use and sport-utility vehicles. They're fun. But so much time is absorbed on them. We are grown children in love with our grownup toys.

More of everything. We are not content. We just want more. No longer are we a "nation under God" indivisible, with liberty and justice for all. We have decided we can do just fine without him. We are a self-made people. We can play a solitary life.

So we plunge even deeper into selfishness. Not only do we attempt to reduce God to nothing, but we also fail to seek support from family and friends. Some of us were born into homes that weren't exactly families. They were like broken tea cups being held together with Elmer's Glue. The only solid families we knew about were on television, and they were make-believe. While these situations weren't our fault, we choose to make the same mistakes our parents made. We refuse to learn from their errors.

And our friends. Some of us have had real winners. As soon as the boat starts to teeter, overboard they jump. A little water splashed, a little inconvenience, and they decide they have had enough fun sailing in our boats.

We find ourselves alone. Abandoned. Trying to paddle, not knowing where we are going. We get involved with groups but we don't attempt to make any real friends, at least not ardently. We long to be successful. We anticipate the day when we will be No. 1. We develop an affinity for ourselves. Our own pleasure is all that seems to matter.

No time for investing in other people. We are reminded every day that there is always someone out there working a little harder, pushing the boundaries a little more than you. So we work harder. We don't consider the cost. It doesn't matter who gets damaged in the process, ourselves included.

The whole look-out-for-yourself idea looks attractive. Everyone else seems to be doing it. But thank God, he has a better plan. A more excellent way than ours. He offers us a path that leads to life. I am thankful that he chose to love us even when we choose to reject him.

I'm glad Jesus chose to embrace the sparrows of society. No one was ever too far removed from his love. I am included. So are you.

Lepers, politicians and filthy-mouthed fishermen were among Jesus' friends. He didn't conform to the religious holier-than-thou attitude. Instead, he chose to hate sin and love the sinner. And he had the eyes to see people not for who they were, but for who they could become.

Sound like a Sunday school lesson with pin-up figures on a velvet board? Maybe. But he didn't care what people thought. He loved them too much.

The next time you realize how much you need God in your life, remember that he is only a prayer away. There is hope.

The experience is unexplainable, and the reason is incomprehensible. Why our Creator would choose to love us is beyond our understanding. Why are we, a people so rebellious and so stubborn, given the chance at eternal life? Why are we offered hope and peace?

Because he loves us. If you're satisfied with your life, go ahead. Keep trying your way. But when you lie awake at night wondering, when you realize your attempts are futile without God, and when despair clenches its talons around your throat and says, "There's no way you'll ever make it," know that he is listening. Know that he offers a better life.

God made a way to be reconciled to himself. No longer must we tote our heavy yokes and burdens. Jesus said that if we will accept him, he will give us an easy yoke and a light burden. He is the way, the truth and the life. And this carpenter from Galilee, who claimed to be the Son of God, said no one can be set free from their sins except through him.

God is still in the repair business — and he makes house calls too.

Jesus is knocking. All you have to do is open the door.

Graduate student offers tips for safe, happy spring break

Editor,

I'd like to thank the Collegian for being so concerned for our safety over spring break and providing us with that list of very important safety tips. It is always important to remember that one can never be too careful.

However, there are a few additional safety tips that must have slipped the minds of the Collegian's editorial staff otherwise they would have included them in their editorial. These include:

- 1) Don't run with scissors.
- 2) Make sure your shoes are tied otherwise you might trip.
- 3) If it's cold outside, button up your coat and wear a hat or you might catch your death.
- 4) Don't take candy from strangers.
- 5) Don't use hair dryers while sitting in the bathtub.
- 6) If you're going swimming, wait 20 minutes after eating.
- 7) Chew your food well before swallowing.
- 8) Don't share needles.
- 9) Don't play with dead animals or any washed up biowaste on the beach.
- 10) Look both ways before you cross the street, or better yet, bring someone from the Collegian with you during spring break to hold your hand (and tie your shoes and button your coat and wipe your ass ...)

Reader says free expression vital to function of country

Editor,

I do not know Russell Fortmeyer nor do I know Paul English. I must, however, respond to English's letter to the editor. Specifically, where he writes:

"As a journalist, do you see your job as a service to the people or simply a pulpit to spread your opinion? Your words appearing on the opinion page lead me to believe that the things you have to say about those few who are willing to step forward and try to make a difference are your opinion."

Seeing that you are as much the loud-mouthed, obnoxious jerk as I am (and it takes one to know one), why don't you learn a little tact, shut up and sit down? No one wants to hear it."

I kind of thought that the "OPINION" page was the place for journalists to write their "OPINION." It isn't called the "LET'S MAKE EVERYONE HAPPY PAGE" that section exists — it's called "COMICS."

Now let me pull less sarcasm and express a very important point. Freedom of speech is VITAL to the function of our country. I don't know what the opinions are of either of the writers, but chances are I disagree with at least one of them. The difference is that Fortmeyer exercises his right often and English exercises his right sparingly.

Back in 1988, I disagreed with the staff writers of the Collegian quite often. But rather than just complain about it, I began publication of the "KSU Collision: The Unofficial Underground Newspaper of Kansas State." It was published on the old VM machines and sent by bitmail. Looking back, the publication was lame (at best). In spite of my poor journalism skills and zero funding, it still managed to grow to 500 or so subscribers in more than seven countries and ran for at least two years after I left.

English, I dare you! I dare you to pick up publication of the KSU Collision! I dare you to create a forum for opposing Fortmeyer's opinions and setting the world straight to your own! I dare you to protect the KSU student body from Fortmeyer's "drivel" as you call it!

English, I dare you to publish!

Scouts have right to exclude homosexuals reader says

Editor,

Until the morning of March 13, I was totally convinced the Collegian was entirely written by a group of scarlet and blue students who attended a certain school about 80 miles downstream of Manhattan. My guess was that each day the finished product was faxed over to K-State, published, then distributed to the staff and student body. Friday morning I opened the Opinion section to find Sam Sackett's article and was relieved to know that at least one person on the Collegian staff had some common sense and good morals. Is he the only one, or are there more of you?

The fact is this: homosexuality is wrong. It is not natural; it is a genetic dead-end. Some would like you to believe that homosexuality is genetically based, but in a same-sex relationship how would a gene be passed on to the next generation? There's also another theory that explains homosexuality as a brain defect of some sort. Well, if that were the case, then by the modern miracles of science and medicine, we should strive to find a cure and offer the attention these people desperately need. Acceptance isn't the answer.

As for the original subject of Sam Sackett's column, the Boy Scouts of America is a private organization and has all the right in the world to exclude whomever it wishes — just as sororities exclude men from membership and fraternities exclude women. (I don't even think there is a law protecting against the discrimination of homosexuals.)

GERRY CRAMER, SOPHOMORE IN FINE ARTS, DRAWS GUIDE LINES FOR A MURAL HE IS WORKING ON FOR MR. GOODCENTS SUBS & PASTA. CRAMER'S 6-FOOT MURAL DEPICTS A SCENE OF OLD ITALY, WITH GONDOLAS DRIFTING DOWN A CANAL BETWEEN CENTURIES-OLD BUILDINGS.

TASTE OF ITALY

A K-State art student helps local restaurant gain Italian ambience.

ALECIA TERRELL
Kansas State Collegian

A K-State art student is helping a local restaurant add an Italian flair to its interior.

Customers at Mr. Goodcents Subs & Pasta will soon be able to eat in a classic Italian atmosphere. The restaurant is redecorating its plain white walls with the help of a mural painted by Gerry Cramer, sophomore in fine arts.

When complete, the circular 6-foot mural will depict a scene of old Italy, with gondolas drifting down a canal between centuries-old buildings. One of those buildings will be an old-world Mr. Goodcents, filled with diners enjoying subs and pasta under umbrellas on the waterfront terrace.

A K-State Powercat will also be included as a subtle cloud formation floating high above the canal.

Cramer, 25, is an employee of Mr. Goodcents, where many of his co-workers have already seen his work.

"He's a really good artist," Shift Manager Edwin Morales said. "I think his work will help enhance the atmosphere of Mr. Goodcents."

Cramer said comes in to paint three to four days per week, depending on his schedule.

"I like to come in at night after Mr. Goodcents closes," he said. "I usually work for about five hours or until I can't stay awake anymore."

Cramer said his goal is to have the mural completed by the end of spring break.

"My schedule has been really hectic lately, but over spring break, I plan on having more time to get the work done," he said.

Cramer said he has been painting since he was young. He first realized he had talent around age 9 or 10. Cramer said that is when he began to get recognition for his work.

"One day I hope to be able to teach painting at a college level," he said. "My main ambition or career-oriented goal is toward painting."

Store Manager Eric Smith said he wanted to tie in a garden feeling with the spring freshness of Italy.

"We decided to redecorate because we get a lot of the student population in here," he said. "We want people to be able to come in and get coffee and just relax or study in a comfortable setting."

Cramer will also paint part of the mural during business hours to allow customers the opportunity to watch him at work.

"A lot of people like to come in and see him at work," Smith said. "Many have commented that the mural is really starting to come alive."

GERRY CRAMER USES ACRYLIC PAINTS AND A SMALL DRAWING OF THE DEPICTED MURAL AS HE WORKS.

SPORTS ROUND-UP

Sports Round-Up is your daily dose of the latest scores, stats and news from the world of sports outside of K-State. Compiled from Associated Press reports.

NCAA Tournament Action

Connecticut 75, Washington 74

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Richard Hamilton's rebound jumper in the lane at the buzzer, Connecticut's third shot in the final eight seconds, gave the second-seeded Huskies a 75-74 victory over Washington in the East Regional semifinals.

Connecticut (32-4) will play top-seeded and top-ranked North Carolina, which beat fourth-seeded Michigan State 73-58, in Saturday's regional final with a berth in the Final Four at stake.

No. 11 seed Washington (20-10) took its first lead at 74-73 with 33 seconds left on a 3-pointer by Donald Watts.

Connecticut called a timeout with 29 seconds left. Freshman point guard Khalid El-Amin dribbled the ball near midcourt until there were 10 seconds left. He drove toward the basket and passed the ball to center Jake Voskuhl, whose shot bounced off the rim, and Hamilton got the rebound and shot, again with the ball coming off the rim.

After it was tipped from the other side, Hamilton grabbed the loose ball and hit a fadeaway jumper over 7-foot Patrick Femerling, the ball falling through the basket as the buzzer sounded. The Connecticut players all fell to the floor in a huge pile as the Huskies advanced to the regional finals for the third time in six rounds of 16 appearances in the '90s.

Utah 65, West Virginia 62

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Jarrod West couldn't come up with another miracle for West Virginia, and this time he even had three chances.

Michael Doleac made two free throws with 6.5 seconds remaining, and West missed a three-pointer as time expired as Utah held off the Mountaineers 65-62 in the West Regional semifinals Thursday night.

"I had good looks at them, they just didn't fall down for me," said a tearful West, whose final three-pointer would have forced overtime.

"I thought he made it," Doleac said. "It hit the front rim. Thank God the clock ran out, their pressure gets to you."

Andre Miller, guarding West on the final play, said his main concern was to not commit a foul.

"If he makes it, it's OK," Miller said. "If it did go into overtime, we probably would have won."

Utah, seeded third, faces top-seeded Arizona on Saturday with a spot in the Final Four at stake.

"I hope we've got a couple cards left in the deck to play," Utah coach Rick Majerus said. "We got a bounce here or there."

"I can't tell you how happy I am. I'm emotionally drained. I told the kids to enjoy it."

Arizona 87, Maryland 79

ANAHEIM, Calif. — There's no stopping Arizona's scoring spurs.

Playing their closest game yet in the NCAA Tournament, the top-seeded Wildcats turned their scoring on and off at will, getting a flurry of points when they needed them.

And they did against Maryland.

Mike Bibby scored 18 of his 26 points in the first half as defending champion Arizona defeated the fourth-seeded Terrapins 87-79 Thursday night to advance to the West Regional final.

The Wildcats (30-4) will play No. 3 Utah on Saturday. The Utes were 65-62 winners over 10th-seeded West Virginia.

The Terrapins (21-11) were the only team in the field to beat two of the top seeds during the regular season, but victories over North Carolina and Kansas couldn't prepare them for Arizona's lethal transition game.

After trailing by 14 early in the second half, Maryland closed within one with 10:32 remaining. Arizona simply kicked in its speedy offensive game, reeling off nine straight points to put down the Terps' threat.

Michael Dickerson had five points in the run that increased Arizona's lead to 66-56. The Terps never got closer than five the rest of the way.

North Carolina 73, Michigan St. 58

GREENSBORO, N.C. — The higher the stakes, the better North Carolina and Antawn Jamison play.

The top-ranked Tar Heels used their superior speed and skill to toss aside Michigan State as the All-American forward had 20 points and 14 rebounds in a 73-58 victory in the East Regional semifinals on Thursday night.

"I'm one of those guys that love the big games. I love if you lose — everything is gone," Jamison said. "This is when I really have fun and my teammates do the same thing."

"We play a lot of teams really gunning after us. When the stakes get high that's when I really relax a lot more."

The top-seeded Tar Heels (33-3) moved within one victory of the single-season school record for wins and a fifth Final Four trip this decade, beating the slower Spartans almost every step of the way.

Vince Carter added 20 points and 10 rebounds, while Shammond Williams had 18 points and a career-tying nine rebounds for the Tar Heels. North Carolina will play Connecticut in Saturday's regional final. One game after being outscored 43-34 in an overtime win against North Carolina-Charlotte in the second round, the Tar Heels destroyed one of the nation's best rebounding clubs 51-33.

THE CHAMPS TAKE A TIME OUT DURING THEIR CHAMPIONSHIP GAME AGAINST THE BORRACHAS AT THE CHESTER E. PETERS RECREATIONAL COMPLEX. THE TEAM IS MADE UP OF WOMEN WHO HAVE KNOWN EACH OTHER SINCE BEFORE HIGH SCHOOL. THEY SAID TEAMWORK WAS THE KEY TO VICTORY.

LADIES' NIGHT

Champs squad keeps dominance of women's intramural league, wins 3rd title in 4 years

DAN MERKER
Kansas State Collegian

Some team names aren't indicative of their teams. At K-State, the Wildcats aren't actually furry creatures, but the Champs are truly champs.

For the third time in four years, the Champs are the women's intramural basketball champions. They beat the Borrachas for the championship Thursday night at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. The final score was 41-32 in favor of the Champs, but the game was closer than indicated.

The Champs are made up of women who have known each other since before high school. All of them played high school basketball, and players who were foes a few years ago are now teammates.

"We've been together for four years," Champs captain Danielle Frieling, senior in nutrition, exercise science and physical therapy, said. "We all met because we have a common interest in basketball and we love basketball."

The Champs were able to jell as a team rather quickly. They said teamwork was the key to victory.

The Champs, who lost their initial bout with the Borrachas in pool play, came out with intensity to exact revenge. A tight full-court man-to-man defense held the Borrachas' offense to only three points in the first eight minutes. At that time, the Champs had an early 11-3 lead.

Two early blocked shots helped the Champs set the defensive tone and force the Borrachas to play much of their game on the perimeter.

"Our height helped us a lot," Frieling said. "No one can really match up with our height."

The Borrachas proved they deserved to be in the championship game, when they stormed back with a 12-4 run to tie the game at 15 with 2:20 left in the first half. At halftime, the Champs had a 17-16 lead.

With three minutes gone in the second half, the Borrachas hit a three-pointer to vault into the lead at 20-19, their first and only lead of the game.

The Champs then closed the door defensively again, holding the Borrachas without a point for seven minutes and keying a 9-0 run. That run, along with clutch free-throw shooting, helped the Champs keep a lead they would never give up. When the final buzzer sounded, the Champs ended up on top again, winning 41-32.

"I think we were more composed," Rachelle Smith, senior in art education and Champs forward, said. "Tonight, we knew how to respond to each other really well and talked a lot."

The Champs are joined as intramural champions by co-rec champs Four Play, fraternity champs Lambda Chi Alpha, residence hall champs Goodnow 3, 6-foot and under champs Backdoor Boyz and independent champs 2's & 7's.

The all-university playoffs start March 30. Lambda Chi will face the Backdoor Boyz at 8 p.m., and Goodnow 3 will face 2's & 7's at 9 p.m. The winners will face each other for the all-university championship the next night at 9 p.m.

Spring break on the links promises to hook just a little slice of heaven

Let me start off by thanking the eight people left on campus for reading this column today. Hopefully, you guys will get away from here soon for some rest and relaxation.

Me, well, I'm getting in a car today and driving off to the land of the Grand Strand — South Carolina. My roommate and I will be visiting Myrtle Beach's finest golf courses (a.k.a. those we can afford) for some days of fun and frustration.

That is, if the rain doesn't wash them all away before we get there.

The numbers vary, but I understand there are dozens of courses to choose from. Finding at least one course hopefully won't be as tough as finding a sports journalism job. Nothing can be that tough.

Admittedly, I am not a good golfer. Not even close. I picked up my first club about four years ago when I met a guy from Scotland. It's like Powercat license plates in Manhattan — everyone from Scotland has clubs. He piqued my interest, and I watched my first golf tournament on television that summer when John Daly won the British Open.

When I arrived at K-State, I needed one more elective so I decided to give golf a try. I signed up for the UFM class taught at Stag Hill Golf Course for spring 1996.

While I learned the arts of the grip and the swing from Stag Hill pro Jim Gregory, I perfected the flaws of the hook and the slice. Especially the slice. While I don't hit very hard, if the ball doesn't go on the fairway, it will end up in the trees/bushes/field to the right of it.

My roommate, however, has a great swing. She can launch that ball farther than some Major League outfielders can throw it. Her golf balls almost always end up in the trees/bushes/field, and finding them becomes our main mission on the course.

My actual experience on a course is limited. I have played a few holes around here and played a nine-hole course in the rain last summer in Kansas City. This will be my first time playing 18 holes. Some call me crazy, while some think it's cool that my first tee time will be on a Robert Trent Jones course or an Arnold Palmer course.

I am encouraged by the fact that in the nine holes I played last summer, I bogeyed two of them. For my first time, I was told that wasn't too bad. But that was when I was going to the driving range at least once a week and hitting fairly consistently. Needless to say, I haven't hit a ball since November.

Regardless of how well things go or how badly I suck, I will still have fun. I can't say I'm a good sport when I play other things like volleyball or softball (my apologies to my fellow co-rec team members), because like most sports-minded people, I hate to lose.

For some reason, with all the frustrations golf brings, the atmosphere and the pace creates a peace not present in any other sport.

The fact that I will be on a beautiful (well-watered, as of late) stretch of green will give me the confidence to tell the jerk behind me yelling about playing through, to shut the hell up.

I guess this column has two morals. The first — no matter how much of a pain it is to get to your destination, or how short this spring break will seem when we all return to snowy Kansas next week, be thankful that we have this break.

Take advantage of it and do something you wouldn't do during daily life at K-State, whether you leave Manhattan or not.

And the second — if you're on a golf course, ready to throw a club at the slow, pathetic group in front of you, take a deep breath and count backwards from 10.

It could be me in front of you. And my clubs aren't cool enough for me to care about throwing one back at you.

Lacrosse more than western Kansas town

DAN MERKER
Kansas State Collegian

Jay Sweet hears the questions almost every time he and his team practice.

"Are you playing rugby or something?"

"Is that field hockey?"

People are often confused when they see the KSU Lacrosse Club practicing south of Memorial Stadium. Many of them just think lacrosse is a town in western Kansas.

Little do they know that Max Urick, K-State director of Intercollegiate athletics, played lacrosse in college. Nor do they know that the club, which consists of about 40 players, is practicing the oldest sport in North America.

"It's a requirement for all lacrosse players (to know that)," Jay Sweet, senior in architectural engineering and club president, said. "When they take speech class, they have to do a speech on lacrosse."

The Lacrosse Club is made up of players from different backgrounds and players with varying experience. Some players, like Sweet, are from the East Coast, where lacrosse is more prevalent and is played more often. Others are from Kansas and just got interested in the sport.

Some players picked up a stick for the first time a few weeks ago, and one played intercollegiate lacrosse and was a two-year All-American at Towson State. He even played indoor lacrosse professionally.

No experience is necessary, though. The club has an open admissions policy. If you want to play, you are welcome to join the team.

"I'd like to see everybody come out and play," Sweet said. "The guys who have never played before are doing really well. I'm surprised they've done as well as they have."

The players on the team play out of love for the game. They have to buy all their own equipment except helmets, and pay to travel to road games, such as the one they played last weekend.

K-State has had a lacrosse club for nine years, and the club proclaims itself as the winningest program at K-State, although the team hasn't won a title in the Great Plains Lacrosse League yet.

"We're the Buffalo Bills of the Great Plains Lacrosse League," Sweet said. "Maybe this year will be a different story."

The league consists of K-State, Kansas, Tulsa, Rockhurst College and the Flying Monkeys from Kansas City, Mo. Wichita State, Missouri and Oklahoma State have had teams in the past, but aren't in the league this year.

Sweet said the Cats will be in the hunt for a title again this year, with the Flying Monkeys as their main competition. K-State plays the Flying Monkeys at 3 p.m. on April 5 at Memorial Stadium. The next home game for K-State will be at 1 p.m. on April 18 against Rockhurst.

Tennis team takes show to Las Vegas

DAN CATALDI
Kansas State Collegian

Look out, Las Vegas. Here comes the K-State women's tennis team.

While many students are enjoying their spring break at beaches around the Western Hemisphere, Wildcat tennis players will be strutting their stuff on the Las Vegas strip.

Of course, they will be playing tennis, not partying.

"We will have a measured amount of fun," K-State coach Steve Bietau said.

But in between the fun, the Cats will be there to battle on the tennis court.

The team will arrive in Las Vegas on Saturday to spend time practicing outdoors.

"We haven't been outside much," Bietau said. "Wind can definitely be a factor down there. A 20 mph wind there is not an unusual thing."

Monday, the Cats will face the UNLV Rebels. The Rebels are a perennial top-notch team undergoing a rebuilding process after having lost their best player.

"They lost their best player, but they also picked up a player," Bietau said. "They are still a very good team."

The team said it believes this could be an important step in reaching the NCAA Tournament.

"This year it is going to be one of the key matches we play," Yana Dorodnova said.

On Tuesday, the Cats will take on the Ohio State Buckeyes.

The Buckeyes are not a traditionally strong program, but they are trying to turn that around. The Buckeyes are led by former Kansas coach Charles Merzbacher.

"He can walk into a place with average players and they are going to play better because he is there," Bietau said.

After the Tuesday match, the team will spend a day relaxing in Las Vegas before heading to Boulder, Colo. on Thursday for a dual meet with the Colorado Buffaloes.

They will spend two days practicing in Boulder's higher elevation.

"We are going there a couple days before the match so we can practice a little bit and get used to the altitude," Dorodnova said.

The two days of practice should help the Cats prepare for the Saturday meet — one of the more important matches for the Cats.

Colorado is in both the Cats' conference and region, making the match doubly important. It is important for conference standings and in the regional rankings, and the regional ranking is important in seeding for the NCAA Tournament.

Crew team spending break training, competing in Texas

KELLY DICKSON
Kansas State Collegian

The women's crew team is heading south in search of warmer weather for spring break. The team will return to Austin, Texas, for spring break training again this year.

"We use spring break to set the tone for the racing season. We do quite a bit of boat selection, even though we open spring break with a race," Coach Jenny Hale said.

"We use spring break training at the varsity level to make sure that we have the fastest boats in terms of the lineups and combinations."

The women have not been able to practice on the water as much as they would have liked, she said. They were supposed to start water practices on Feb. 18, but only about nine practices have been on the water.

This could put the team at a disadvantage with racing schools that are on the water almost year-round.

"I don't think it will affect us at all. Just because of all the work that we have done inside. We will just bring what we have learned from the inside to the outside," rower Rebecca Riemer said.

The team starts off spring break with a dual race against Texas. Last year's team won four of the five races in the Texas dual.

"They were good to race last year. They were competitive to race last year, but we raced them with a novice crew," Hale said.

Since last year was K-State's first year with varsity status, all the members of the team were considered novices regardless of previous rowing experience. Each athlete has one year of novice status. During that year they can row in a novice or varsity boat.

"I think the dual with Texas will turn into a really good thing. That is really what our training site hinged on this year," Hale said.

The team will also end the training trip with a race with Tulsa March 28. Tulsa is a new varsity program this year.

"I would expect Tulsa to be more competitive than Texas or at least as good," Hale said.

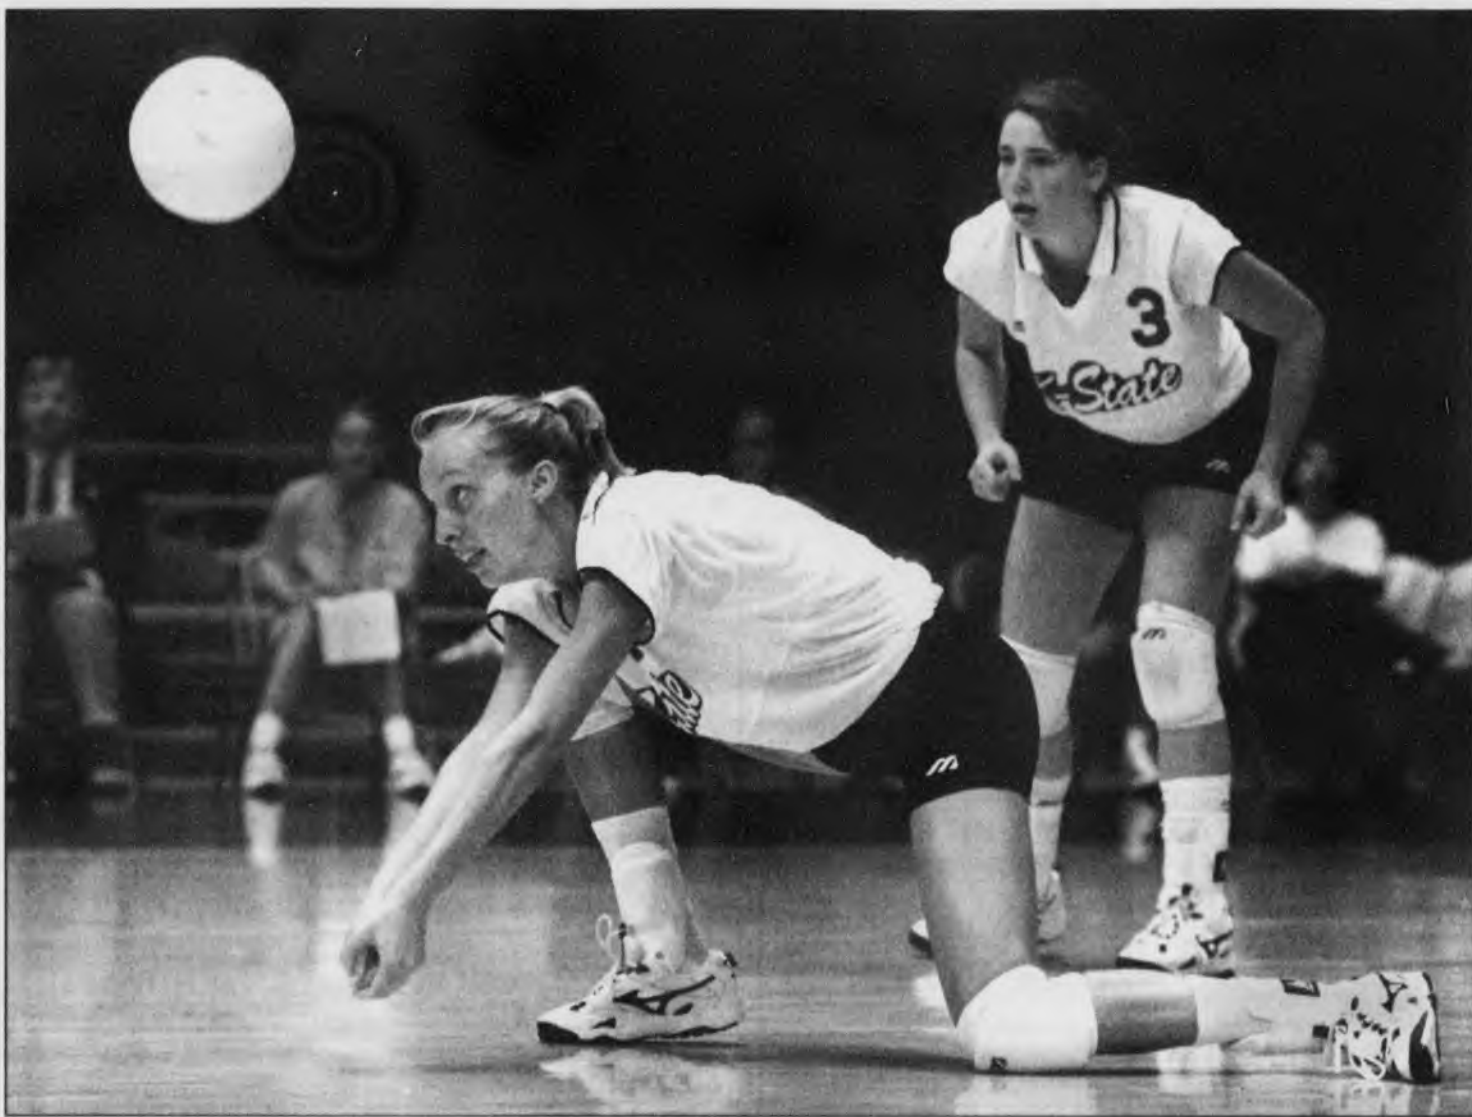

The rest of week will be spent practicing on the river in Austin. Morning and afternoon practices are scheduled for four of the days in Austin. The practices are to help the team reach the goals and expectations it has set for itself and to help with its physical conditioning.

"Our goals for racing season are just to become a stronger team, an even stronger one than we have been in the past years," Riemer said. "Our expectations have always been the best quality that we can do."

Physical goals are not the only ones the team is working toward.

"We just need to work together. Right now the varsity and the novice teams haven't really associated much together, so I think one of the biggest goals for the two teams to get to know each other," coxswain Vandy Paul said.

K-State offered chance to compete against Team USA

DAN MERKER
Kansas State Collegian

While many students have plans to spend spring break in warm, far-away destinations thinking of anything besides school, the K-State volleyball team is going to be at work.

The team is going to spend the week working out with the USA National Team in Colorado Springs, Colo. Team USA visited the Wildcats on September 29, 1997, on a tour of collegiate teams and beat K-State 3-0. The trip was initially set up then, and K-State will get a rare chance to interact with the best players in the country.

K-State coach Jim McLaughlin said this is a special opportunity for the team.

"K-State is the only team in the country to do this this year,"

McLaughlin said. "It's a great opportunity for us."

The team will spend three days at the National Training Facility practicing with and playing against the national team. The players will stay in the dorms and eat with the team — basically being adopted as national team members for a few days.

The Cats just started spring practice, and they should improve practicing with such a high level of competition, McLaughlin said.

"They're just a little bit better. They have more experience," McLaughlin said. "It will be a good test for us."

K-State isn't far behind the national team isn't as far as quality of play goes. Even though the Cats lost 3-0 when the teams met last fall, K-State nearly took a game from Team

USA, battling to tie at 14-14 in the second game before surrendering two straight points to come up short.

The team hopes this opportunity will help it improve as a squad, McLaughlin said. K-State has reached the NCAA Tournament each of the last two seasons and has been ranked in the top 25.

McLaughlin said the Cats hope to take the next step, and practicing with Team USA should help the team, which loses only one starter from the 1997 group, go to the next level.

"I think it helps us out because we're playing a grade above us," McLaughlin said. "Any time you play against someone better than you, you're going to improve."

There is also hope that exposure to the national team will pave the way for a K-State player to eventually join the squad and someday represent her country in the Olympics and other international competitions.

"Someday and someday soon, we hope to see a KSU shirt turn into a USA shirt," McLaughlin said. "Instead of purple, that shirt will be red, white and blue."

To be able to say that speaks volumes about the progress K-State volleyball has made in the past five years. Since 1993, the volleyball program has gone from riding a 38-game conference losing streak to being the only team in the country to have the chance to practice with the national team.

There is even an off-chance of having a player go from Manhattan to Sydney, Australia, to represent the United States in the 2000 Summer Olympics, McLaughlin said.

Single success validates smoke detector program

"Overall, I think there has been only one home that didn't have smoke detectors," she said. "There have been a few I've found weren't working."

Dwain Archer, K-State fire inspector and director of public safety, said checking smoke detectors to make sure they still work is very important.

"You should push the test button at least once a month and hold it in for at least five seconds," he said. "Switching the battery is very important, too."

Archer advises using a sharp object to scratch a date into the battery. He said batteries should be changed at least once a year.

Archer said placement of smoke detectors is very important.

"Everyone knows to place smoke detectors in the hall outside of a door, but people seldom place them in attics and car garages," he said.

Archer said a car could catch on fire in a garage. Sometimes birds will carry lit cigarettes to the attic, he said, and heating units are often in the attic.

Rieka Gerkin, Lloyd's daughter, said she is grateful for the smoke detector that saved her mother's life.

"A lot of people don't stop and think about smoke detectors," she said. "A lot don't think they need it."

Lloyd came out of the fire with just a few third-degree burns to her hands and feet, but Gerkin said the smoke from the fire has affected her mother's breathing.

"It's slowed her down tremendously," she said.

Lloyd said she's trying to put the fire behind her.

"I try to push myself to keep going," she said. "But so many memories were lost."

Gerkin said her mother was a lucky woman.

"Some people don't live through it to tell it," she said.

"She's super lucky."

Senate to vote today to diversify schools' representation on Regents

is a good idea, but problems with the clarity of the bill would have to be worked out, and I'm concerned that it would limit membership of qualified people."

Requirements for regents are enough, Thomas Rawson, vice president for administration and finance at K-State, said. For example, no more than five board members can come from one political party, and each of the four congressional districts in the state must be represented.

"I think the board has done a good job of representing all the universities, and the way it has been constituted up-to-date has been very unbiased," Rawson said.

As state officials in Topeka debated the bill Thursday, the proposed Council on Higher Education came a step closer to a vote in the Senate.

A possible constitutional amendment that would replace the regents with a higher education council was passed by the House, and Glasscock said his sentiments about university representation wouldn't change if the council was realized.

"The most qualified people should get the job no matter what the structure of the administration," Glasscock.

An Open Letter to Students Planning to Attend Law School from U.S. News & World Report

Dear Student:

DON'T YOU JUST HATE TO BE GRADED? Well, by their shrill protests about U.S. News & World Report law school rankings, so do most of the deans of the law schools you are considering. However, as a law school graduate with both a J.D. and a LL.M. degree, I can tell you that these same deans will subject you to rigorous grading. You will be required to endure lectures from tenured professors who have not changed their class notes since the Battle of Hastings. Then, after attending class for a full semester, you will be given one exam to determine your grade. One exam, one semester, one grade. One roll of the dice to measure your performance.

At U.S. News & World Report we are far more equitable (to use a legal term). We have a multi-faceted, multi-dimensional, sophisticated ranking system developed and evolved over many years to give you guidance on what may be one of your largest financial investments and certainly one of the most important choices for your career in law and perhaps beyond. While our law school rankings should not be the only criteria in your choice of a law school, they should certainly be an important part of the analysis.

Get your copy of U.S. News & World Report's Best Graduate Schools guide on newsstands now. Or, to make it easier for you to see the book that 164 law school deans would prefer you not see (notwithstanding their commitment to the First Amendment), call 1-800-836-6397 (ask for extension 5105) and I will arrange for a copy of the book to be sent directly to you at $1 off the newsstand price.* This will also ensure that you have a copy of these important rankings because, as a result of publicity surrounding the deans' determination to have you ignore the rankings, they are a very hot item.

These law school rankings are a small part of our philosophy of News You Can Use®: information we bring you in each issue of the magazine to help you manage your life.

Good luck in law school and good luck on making the right choice.

Kindest Regards,

Sincerely,

* Shipping and handling charges additional

Hollywood, K-State make plans for 70th-Annual Academy Awards

CHRIS DEAN
Kansas State Collegian

The nominations have been made, the presenters have been selected and the dress-rehearsals have been chosen.

With Oscar's big night just around the corner, the only question left is who will walk away the big winner.

The 70th-Annual Academy Awards, airing at 8 p.m. Monday on ABC, guarantee to be a contest of the titans as only 33 full-length films will fight for 18 Oscars.

The $200 million-plus epic "Titanic" has already achieved Oscar history by tying "All About Eve" for most number of nominations with 14 total. However, "L.A. Confidential" and "Good Will Hunting" threaten to give it a run for its money with nine nominations each.

Before the big night, make your own predictions on the top six categories and compare them to the Collegian's panel of experts. Watch the Collegian on Monday following spring break to see how you did compared to them.

If you haven't seen all the movies yet, don't worry. No one has. But you still have the chance to see some of them, as four nominations are showing in Manhattan this weekend. "Afterglow," "As Good As It Gets" and "Good Will Hunting" can be seen at Westloop 6 Theatres, and "Titanic" is going on its 13th week at Seth Childs 6 Theatres.

Independent movies to be honored during Academy Awards' ad breaks

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Cable TV's Bravo is offering viewers a break from Oscar commercial breaks. The channel will show highlights of the Independent Spirit Awards, which honor independent films, during Oscar ads Monday night.

The entire Spirit ceremony can be seen live at 3:30 p.m. Central Standard Time Saturday on The Independent Film Channel.

Actor John Turturro is the master of ceremonies and filmmaker Spike Lee delivers the keynote speech.

Presenters are set to include Vondie Curtis-Hall, Minnie Driver and Ben Stiller. Among the best-feature nominees are "Chasing Amy" and "The Apostle."

Folk singer helps BirdHouse celebrate 3rd anniversary

JOHN FRANSON
Kansas State Collegian

His song "Heartbeat of America" once helped Chevrolet sell vehicles.

This weekend, he's coming to the Heartland to help the BirdHouse acoustic concert series celebrate its third anniversary.

Cliff Eberhardt will perform 8 p.m. Saturday at the Manhattan Center for the Arts.

David Kamerer, BirdHouse chair and assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, said Eberhardt is an energetic singer/songwriter who plays with the intensity of a rocker.

"He used to have a rock band, but he manages to channel all the energy into just his voice and his guitar," he said. "What's really great is when the three things come together: a great song with great vocal performance and great instrumental support. And Cliff is capable of all three."

Eberhardt earned his "bad boy of folk" reputation through his energetic live performances, Kamerer said.

"He has this kind of reckless, devil-may-care attitude," he said. "He's also very funny."

Kamerer said Eberhardt's talent has even earned the admiration of one of the most famous folk rockers, Bob Dylan.

"One of the songwriters who came through here told me that Bob Dylan is a big Cliff Eberhardt fan," Kamerer said.

BirdHouse will also celebrate its third year of existence Saturday. Members will give out free cake and coffee and have drawings for compact discs and merchandise donated by Aggieville merchants.

"If you just sign up on our mailing list you get a chance," he said.

The celebration coincides with an exhibit at the art center of birdhouses designed by Manhattan architect Brent Bowman.

Kamerer said BirdHouse planned the anniversary celebration to happen concurrently with the exhibit.

"It's kind of a nice tie-in with our anniversary," he said.

BirdHouse has steadily improved over the years, with increasingly bigger-named artists and a slow rise in attendance, Kamerer said.

"We sell out about every other show now," he said. "We have very loyal, supportive fans."

The coming season will feature even bigger artists, such as Christine Lavin of the band Four Bitchin' Babes and British guitarist Martin Simpson, who Kamerer said is one of the best guitarists in the world.

Kamerer said Eberhardt could be a good diversion for students spending spring break in Manhattan.

"It's music that speaks to young people very well, and it's a killer live show," he said. "If you're here on spring break, there's not a lot else to do so why not come down and give it a try."

Tickets are $10 or $8 for students and seniors and are available at the Dusty Bookshelf, the Manhattan Center for the Arts and at the door.

Movie matinees offer spring break options

CHRIS DEAN
Kansas State Collegian

For people staying in town over spring break, there is now an option to soap opera madness.

All next week, Manhattan movie theaters will have matinee showings for all movies. The matinees, which are generally available on Saturday and Sunday, start showing around 1 p.m.

Bob Howard, city manager for Carmike Cinemas, said the matinees are scheduled for students on spring break.

"We go by the public school's schedule," he said. "As a general rule, we show matinees whenever public schools are out."

Although all movies playing in Manhattan are rated PG-13 or R and are not suitable for younger audiences, Howard said he expects to see a moderate attendance.

All matinee shows starting before 6 p.m. are $4 per person.

Megatrends shaping today's agriculture promise prosperity for farmers' future

AMY EBERT
Kansas State Collegian

Agriculture will continue to grow and prosper in the U.S., and students should be excited about their future in the industry, said Dan Manternach, president of Professional Farmers of America.

Manternach was on campus for National Agriculture Week. He addressed the "Seven Megatrends in Agriculture."

"We have identified seven megatrends shaping the future of agriculture that I think are going to allow you to leave this auditorium as fired up about the future of agriculture as you have ever been," Manternach said. "The type of prosperity that we see coming to agriculture in the next 12 years is not something that is going to prove to be a mirage."

Manternach's first megatrend, the polarization of farm size, said the move towards larger farms will continue in the U.S. He said the movement toward the larger farm will decrease the number of smaller farms.

"One of the most common questions is 'Do you see any end in sight?' I answer that I don't see an end, but I see a slowing of the trend," he said. "I wish I could say that I did see an end in sight, because most of us in this room know the social benefits of the family farm structure that we have in this country."

Manternach said the reason for the trend toward the larger farms is simply defined by efficiency.

"If those smaller farmers don't find out how to be competitive, they are inevitably going to become more efficient or be swallowed up and absorbed by one that is more efficient," he said.

Another megatrend, the increasing use of consultants, Manternach said would be the future for the students involved in agriculture, but not planning to return to farming.

"I see a lot of young people in this group, and that's great because there's an exploding field right now in the use of consultants by farmers who are beginning to see themselves more now as chief executive officers rather than jacks-of-all-trades," he said.

Manternach said another exciting megatrend was the coming of age of high-tech, precision farming. The use of global positioning systems, yield monitors and variable rate applications of fertilizers and chemicals will make farmers more efficient, Manternach said.

"This is not a flash in the pan, passing fad. Precision farming is a megatrend that is here to stay," he said.

Precision farming has a global effect and is making more foreign markets more competitive, Manternach said.

"We no longer have the technological lead time over foreign competition that we used to have. We live in an information age. Brazilian and Argentine farmers now have yield monitors in their combines, too," he said.

The megatrend of rapid growth in designer crops and livestock strains will allow consumers to buy products that are identity-marked. The consumer will be able to trace where the animal came from that produced the meat they purchased.

Manternach said the product identity would prevent harming the industry with food contamination scares.

"We won't have scares like Oprah created with mad cow disease. We won't injure the entire industry just because Oprah said she won't eat another hamburger again," he said.

Manternach commended the students who plan to continue to be involved in the agriculture industry. He said they have an exciting future ahead.

"Farming or being involved in agriculture is the greatest industry on this planet. Being involved in the food and fiber business is nothing short of partnering with God to feed and clothe a hungry world."

Public library closes doors

SHELLY SLATIER
Kansas State Collegian

The Manhattan Public Library closed its doors Wednesday until April 19 to allow construction crews and library employees to complete the final stage of the library's renovation.

The library has closed twice since construction began in November 1996.

Officials said shutting down for a month is the library's only option. For the library to remain open, the staff would have to work from midnight to dawn around construction.

Judith Edelstein, library assistant director for services, said the staff will be moving heavy shelves with machines and they don't want to put the public into danger.

"One of the main reasons we decided to close is because it's getting dangerous for patrons," Edelstein said. "Construction crews will soon be knocking down walls once we get books moved into the new building."

Brian Bray, library reference specialist, said every staff member is on a book-moving crew and no one is getting a vacation. He said crews still have much work to do before the renovation is complete.

"We are cleaning and moving around the construction crew, and space is tight," he said. "Construction workers still need to do electrical work, place tile, carpet, paint and install plumbing, so we need to get out of the way."

Library Director Fred Atchison said the promise of new space is keeping the staff in positive spirits.

"The last few weeks have been busy and the adrenaline is pumping because we are reacting to lots of new things every time we turn around," he said.

Edelstein said during the first week of the closing, the staff will shift almost every book to a new location.

"We're going to be moving departments to their new departments," she said. "We've talked about how long all of this would take, and I think we've given ourselves enough time."

There will be three floors to the new library and a total of 22,144 more square feet. Services for the blind and physically handicapped will be on the lower level.

Edelstein said patrons can go to the Junction City and Wamego libraries and use their Manhattan library card to check out materials.

"We've sent notices out to let people know we would be closing for a month," she said. "I know it's a difficult situation, but we don't have a lot of choices."

Sarah DeArmond, Manhattan High School East Campus freshman, said she has a research project due in a few weeks. She said her teacher suggested students use the school library or Hale Library.

"I think the library closing is a bad thing because it is kind of hard to do a research project when we don't have a good place to do research," DeArmond said.

Manhattan resident Mike Martin said closing for a month is the library's only option.

"Well, there is no other way to finish up the construction unless they close up," he said.

Sudden foot of snow puts damper on southern Kansans' spring fever

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — Meyer's Garden Spot should have been busy on Thursday, with customers buying seeds for their vegetable gardens and flowers for their front lawns.

But as up to a foot of snow fell — causing messy roads, school closings and flight cancellations on the day before the official start of spring — it was quiet.

"That's an understatement," said Michelle Hargrave, who was literally up to her elbows in marigolds. "This weather really hurts us bad. It should be our hot time."

The storm began Wednesday evening in western Kansas with sleet and freezing rain.

The ice quickly turned to a light, drifting snow, dumping between six and nine inches around Liberal, Dodge City and Garden City before tapering off Thursday.

Although no weather-related fatality car accidents were reported by the Highway Patrol, many motorists slid off the road or into other cars.

Northern Kansas had a light dusting east of Oakley, but few problems were reported. In southwest Kansas, wind caused drifting and low visibility. A heavy, wet snow fell in south-central Kansas, coming down hard throughout the day and making roads slick and hard to maneuver. Spots of rain in eastern Kansas turned to snow by mid-afternoon, but there was little accumulation.

Many flights were delayed or canceled at Wichita Mid-Continent Airport, mostly because employees often had to de-ice planes more than once.

Michelle Dunkley, an employee at the Wichita Marriott hotel, said guests who left for the airport were returning to stay another night. By mid-afternoon, the hotel was full.

"Nobody's going out or coming in," she said.

The snow canceled public events and closed schools and colleges. Wichita State University canceled classes and all activities after 3 p.m.

Robert Lummus, an employee at Quality Chevrolet in Wichita, threw an occasional snowball at a co-worker Thursday morning as they shoveled snow off a sidewalk.

"My ears are freezing," he said after the snowball fight.

Inside the car dealership, it was quiet as cars crawled slowly to work on slushy, snowy streets.

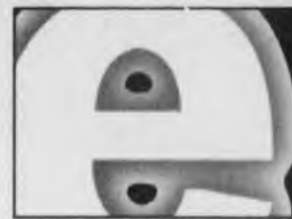

Although employees didn't expect many customers looking for new cars, they were waiting for the inevitable calls from people who needed new headlights or other parts because of weather-related accidents.

"We get a jillion phone calls," employee Bernie Purvine said.

The snow made it difficult for crews to finish repairing electric lines downed by an ice storm earlier this week in western Kansas. About 1,500 West Plains Energy customers around Dodge City and 50 to 100 in Great Bend who lost power Monday during the ice storm were still without power on Thursday. Shelters had been set up at armories in both cities.

Only one person, who declined to be interviewed, had taken refuge at the Dodge City shelter Thursday afternoon. National Guard Staff Sgt. Gary Salmons said the shelter had housed only a few people since it opened.

"The people out here will stay home and bundle up," he said.

Principal/Counselor/Student Conference

The Office of Admissions cordially invites former students of these high schools to attend the 1998 Principal-Counselor-Student Conference. High school principals and counselors will be on campus to visit with you about your preparation for and experiences in KSU Academic programs.

You are welcome to drop by between 10:45 a.m. and 12:15 p.m. on Monday, March 30. This is an excellent opportunity for you to renew old friendships with former classmates. The Provost has asked that your instructors excuse you from these class periods.

K-State trying to get recycling program off ground

JENNIFER LUCKE
Kansas State Collegian

K-State is looking at implementing a campuswide recycling program in conjunction with the city of Manhattan.

The university is assembling a committee to look at the feasibility of a recycling program, said Steve Galitzer, director of public safety and chairman of Riley County Solid Waste Committee.

The Riley County committee is looking for businesses to recycle office refuse and also for ways the community at large can recycle, Galitzer said.

K-State is trying to develop a grant with city/university funds to start a pickup program, he said.

The vice president's office should appoint the campus committee this spring, said Edward Rice, associate vice president of facilities.

K-State already has made some limited recycling efforts, Galitzer said. Safely reusable lab chemicals are recycled.

The Division of Public Safety recycles used batteries. There are a few drop-off points on campus for paper recycling, and some individual departments recycle their office waste.

What the university wants to do is recycle larger amounts of aluminum cans, paper and cardboard, Galitzer said.

He also said reducing trash might save K-State money. It costs the university $30 per ton to haul trash.

What do we think?
The Collegian editorial board says the implementation of a campus recycling program is long overdue. See Page 4.

goods until they can be recycled, because the campus is so decentralized, Galitzer said.

"The only way to make money on recycling is to save it up until you have enough," Galitzer said.

"We don't have a place to store those trailers."

Rice said a campuswide recycling program might be in place within the next few years.

"The program is really tied into the city/university funds, and I believe that was outlined as the year 2000 to get up and running," Rice said.

Recycling will not work without student and campus involvement.

"We need student support to get this to work," Galitzer said.

Galitzer said there would have to be a central drop-off point to make recycling convenient for students.

"A recycling program is not going to work if people have to go out of their way," Galitzer said.

Other universities have looked at, or successfully started, campuswide recycling programs.

The University of Kansas previously had a campuswide newsprint recycling program, Bob Porter, KU facilities representative, said.

The program has since been dropped, although the school is looking at instituting a more comprehensive recycling program, including white paper, aluminum and newsprint.

"They're trying to get it implemented. It's in its infancy, but we have hopes for it," Porter said.

The University of Colorado at Boulder started a campuswide program for recycling in 1976 in which students on campus may drop off items such as several kinds of paper, newsprint, glass, aluminum, plastic and aerosol containers at a central sorting place to be recycled, Kourtney Nelson, recycling services outreach staff, said.

According to a study released by the National Wildlife Federation, Colorado has recycled 9,880 tons of paper and other materials.

2 students win scholarships for academics

ANDREW D. WIMMER
Kansas State Collegian

K-State has done it again. For the second time in two years and for the third time this decade, two K-State students have won Harry S. Truman Scholarships.

This is the eighth time in the history of the competition two K-State students have been awarded the scholarships. Only Yale, Duke, Stanford, Harvard, Radcliffe and Princeton have more Truman Scholars than K-State.

Tim Reimann, senior in agriculture economics and pre-law; and Ryan Bock, junior in political science, pre-law and French; were each awarded the $30,000 Truman Scholarship.

"The process was really challenging," Reimann said. "It was really brought into focus what I want to be doing 20 or 30 years down the road."

Reimann tentatively plans on attending Syracuse University in New York and beginning work on a master's degree in public relations next year.

Bock said he was more concerned about the application than the personal interview.

"I knew that it would be harder to distinguish myself from the eight to 900 other applications with just my résumé," Bock said. "It's far easier to make an impression on the judges in the interview."

Bock said his future plans are not set, but he still has a year at K-State before he has to make a decision.

"I haven't decided exactly where or what I'll be doing after next year," he said.

"I have all next year to decide, but right now, I am leaning toward attending American University in Washington, D.C., and working toward a master's degree in foreign service."

Man arrested in Kansas set for execution

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TRAVERSE CITY, Mich. — He killed five people, seriously wounded two others, laughed about it and initially asked to be executed, saying, "I want them to pull the switch."

Thirteen years later, Daniel Remeta is fighting for his life.

The 40-year-old Traverse City native is scheduled to die at 7:01 a.m. Tuesday in Florida's electric chair for murdering a convenience store clerk. A temporary reprieve last week was quickly lifted, and his attorney was making a last-ditch appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Mehrle "Chet" Reeder of Ocala, Fla., was the first person Remeta killed during a three-week orgy of crime and drunkenness that began with a robbery in Michigan and ended in a shootout with police in a Kansas farmyard. One of Remeta's partners died in the battle; his girlfriend was hurt.

"I have always been neutral on capital punishment — until now," said Arvid McFarland, father of a restaurant manager Remeta gunned down near Grainfield, Kan., the afternoon of Feb. 13, 1985.

Over the next couple of hours, Remeta would kidnap and kill two grain elevator workers execution-style on a dirt road near Colby, Kan.

He also shot the elevator manager and a county undersheriff.

Both survived, as did an 18-year-old gas station attendant in Waskom, Texas, whom Remeta had robbed and shot six times a few days earlier. Before going to Kansas, he robbed and killed a grocery store clerk in Dyer, Ark.

THE JUICE IS ON THE LOOSE

Juice shops bring healthy drink alternatives to Aggieville

A healthy new trend has hit Manhattan with an alternative way to intake rich sources of vitamins and minerals.

Throughout Kansas, juice bars have been popping up in college towns. Last July, two juice bars opened their doors in Aggieville. Natural blends of juiced fruits, vegetables and organically grown wheatgrass are a few of the health-focused ingredients the bars offer.

"Juice is a new concept — the whole smoothie thing," said Scott Wilson, co-owner of Mombasa Juice Co.

Wilson, a Manhattan resident, brought Mombasa to his hometown with the help of his family. After his mother in California thought of the idea, Wilson and his two sisters developed the independently owned business.

"Out in California, juice bars are awfully trendy," Wilson said. "They are everywhere."

He said Mombasa was open a month before The Juice Stop, a local juice bar franchise, opened.

Wilson said Mombasa was really busy when it first opened last summer. He expects the juice bar to be busy again as weather gets warmer.

"This winter has been really slow. You can understand that it's harder to come in and have a cold drink when it's cold outside," he said. "A few people come in early for breakfast, then a couple within the next hours. It's not real hectic right now."

Wilson said the higher price of juice drinks might keep business low in this Kansas town.

"I think another one of the reasons we don't do a whole lot of business is because of price," he said. "It's a little higher than people in Manhattan are used to paying for something that just appears to be a drink."

The Juice Stop, a juice bar franchise from Mission Viejo, Cal., has built more than 80 locations nationwide and now has a juice bar in Manhattan.

"The corporation started out as a small thing and just kind of caught on," said Heather Boyer, shift manager of The Juice Stop. "Now they're popping up in all the college towns."

Boyer said competition between juice bars keeps her on her toes. She said she thought The Juice Stop came to Manhattan to broaden horizons and give some alternatives to what was already available.

"People are finding that coffee and cappuccino isn't quite healthy," Boyer said. "You can drink a lot of it as a short burst of energy, but then it's gone. With (smoothies), I noticed that you get an all-day energy. People are also trying to be healthier. They are a little more worried about their weight, especially college students with how they look and feel."

Boyer said K-State athletes and cheerleaders

Third Team--$100
Fourth Team--$75

Teams of 2 to 4 members will be allowed to enter. The contest consists of finding a creative solution to a simple problem. Time will be given to construct an apparatus to solve the problem. All supplies needed will be provided. Specific Information about the problem will be given the night of the contest. Sign up in RA 142 by 5:00 PM, Monday, March 30.

McCain booking requires research

JILL BUTLER
Kansas State Collegian

Many behind-the-scenes decisions are made when deciding which performances will take place at McCain Auditorium.

Audience members are given surveys they fill out and give back to McCain. Surveys also are sent out by mail, included in newsletters and taken by phone to find out what people want to see.

"I do a lot of talking to people and people send in things they've seen performed elsewhere," Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium, said. "There is a whole network of agencies that call and try to get you to bring their events in."

Martin said that before booking something, he has to sift through information and make sure it will be interesting and affordable.

Prices also are determined according to how much money comes in from group donations and individual contributions.

"If we keep the quality at a high enough level, people will want to see the attraction and spend money to come," he said. "We have a very remarkable note of value and quality in our acts."

Some companies send videos for audiences to see in advance.

"We review some of the shows when they receive videos at McCain," said Shanika Foster, a senior in construction science and management, who works in the McCain box office. "Most companies send the shows to be seen, and, at the end of August, flyers are sent out to the public."

Martin said scheduling events can be difficult.

"One of the most frustrating things is that there is no infinite number of days to program," he said.

"We may not be able to program a very popular event because of an academic event that has already been scheduled in McCain."

Kruh said a performance that will come to Manhattan, have high attendance and be affordable can be difficult to find.

"It's a very difficult process of negotiation to get people to come here and appeal to a wide range of interests."

New scholarships may benefit business students

KELLY DICKSON
Kansas State Collegian

A $100,000 endowment has been created through the KSU Foundation by Paul and Sandra Edgerley to benefit students in the College of Business Administration.

"He was someone that we were in touch with because he had been a supporter of the university in the past," Jeff Chapman, director of development for the College of Business Administration, said. "He established this fund because he loves K-State, he is very close to K-State and was interested in doing something for the college of business."

The scholarships will be awarded to students in the College of Business Administration who have achieved academic excellence and exhibit leadership within the college, on campus and in the community.

"I have asked them to recognize scholarship and leadership. I asked that priority be given to a fraternity or sorority member, not that it be a requirement, but being in a fraternity was a big positive for me," Edgerley said. "I wanted to try and recognize someone who has shown a combination of those skills."

Edgerley graduated from K-State in 1978 with a bachelor of science degree in business administration. He represented his college as a student senator and also served as the attorney general of the Student Governing Association. He was a member of Blue Key Senior Honorary and served as the treasurer and president of the Delta Upsilon fraternity.

Edgerley said he has his own reasons for establishing the scholarship.

"As a business undergrad, I actually received a Blue Key scholarship, going from my junior to senior year. It was meaningful to me to be recognized," Edgerley said.

Diane Hinrichs, stewardship coordinator at the Foundation, said the $100,000 fund will probably generate about $5,000 of spendable money to fund the scholarships during its first year.

The scholarships are to be an award of no less than $2,000. There will probably be two scholarships of about $2,500, Hinrichs said.

Edgerley earned his master of business administration degree from Harvard in 1983. He is the managing director of Bain Capital Inc. in Boston.

University desperately needs recycling program

Implementing a campuswide recycling program in conjunction with the City of Manhattan is long overdue.

Although some recycling is done in individual offices or departments, there needs to be mass organization and an outlet for individuals wanting to get involved.

Recycling requires individual and community effort. However, other campuses and communities have made recycling a priority. Organizing the effort will help make the act of recycling more convenient.

Sorting and transporting products for recycling should not be a difficult and laborious task. Organization of drop-off points and multi-colored bins, as some campuses use, make the chore of recycling easier for the entire community.

Steve Galitzer, director of public safety and chairman of Riley County Solid Waste Committee, is a leader in the recycling effort on campus. However, the development of this program needs volunteers and student leaders willing to contribute time and to make a commitment toward a successful program.

Individual students and faculty have the largest role in the success of this endeavor. Those interested in recycling can take the initiative to sort and recycle their household products now.

Funding is an issue, and using city/university tax funds to begin a pick-up program is a great start.

The leadership of this recycling program should concentrate on organizing the effort and publicizing the specifics to allow more involvement from the campus and community at large.

In addition to recycling products, there should be a campuswide effort to reduce the number of products used. For example, students can reuse plastic bottles and bags multiple times or purchase refills instead of buying new products.

In less than a month, on April 22, K-State celebrates Earth Day. Recycling, however, is not reserved for holidays, and the most significant improvement can be done by working toward a better environment a little each day.

SPRING BREAK LESSON IN SAFETY

Columnist recalls traumatic experience of near-fatal car accident

VIEWPOINT

JASON RUCKER

Jason is a senior in animal science. You can send e-mail to Jason at arubis@ksu.edu.

Spring break arrived quickly, and we were all in a hurry to get away from the tests, term papers and semester projects for a week. Most of us left in our trusty cars to beaches, slopes, the outdoors or, maybe, to make some money. But in our haste to get out of here, sometimes we fail to consider one thing: making it back.

I never really thought about it myself until last year. We drive every day and never think twice about it. That is, until you become one of many people injured in car wrecks every year.

A year ago, I was with a group of friends on our way to Arkansas for a camping trip. We arrived safely, saw the local sights, hiked a trail and enjoyed the outdoors. The trip was fun and relaxing. But for four of us, the details of the trip were overshadowed by our unfortunate experience on the way home.

We had split up for the trip home. My carload was going north on a four-lane highway. I was driving, and everyone else in the car had fallen asleep. I noticed I was passing cars like "Smokey and the Bandit," so I double-checked my speed, but I was doing the limit.

A hundred yards ahead there was a T-intersection, where a county road dead-ended into the highway. Sitting at the stop sign on the county road was a white semi-truck. I thought nothing of it, until we were about 30 yards from the intersection, and the truck driver decided to gun it and make a left turn across four lanes of 70-mph traffic.

The truck stopped because of oncoming traffic in the southbound lane, his trailer completely blocking both lanes of our side of the road. I was completely mortified.

I stomped on the brakes, but we started to slide, and, apparently, I yelled enough to wake up my passengers, though I don't remember saying anything (I realize you are supposed to apply steady pressure to the brake, but try doing that with your adrenaline in overdrive).

In a situation like this, you learn how quickly your brain can operate. I didn't even realize what had gone through my head until much later. As we were sliding between 60 to 70 mph toward a semi-trailer only about 20 yards in front of us, I tried to steer around the end, but that was about the time the trailer stopped.

The ditch next to our car was a ravine. I considered going under the trailer, and then went for the rear tires. The car seemed to be gliding on air. It was like a bad dream.

Everything went silent as I saw the windshield spider and the hood crumple up. I was knocked into a daze.

I suddenly became aware of exactly what had happened, and I could only think to get myself and everyone else out of the car. I hurried around to check on the others as people stopped to help.

I was offered several business cards of witnesses, and the ambulances and highway patrol arrived.

At the hospital, my girlfriend and I were put into the same emergency room.

I couldn't turn my head to see her because my clavicle was injured. Tears welled in my eyes because I felt responsible for my friends being hurt. The doctors came in and assured me everyone was going to be fine. The police took statements from everybody, and we called home to tell our parents the bad news and arrange for the seven-hour ride home.

We were very lucky; no one sustained any permanent injuries beyond a few scars. We were moved to the intensive care unit waiting room where there were recliners for the two of us with leg injuries to put our feet up. We were a ragged lot, with one broken arm, one cut cheek, one banged up knee and a bad ankle, along with a lot of bruises.

The people in the hospital were great. They made us a meal during the wait while we talked about our ordeal with the family members of the ICU patients.

A K-State graduate came to ask if we needed anything. It's times like this the goodness in people shines the most.

Unfortunately, most passengers of compact cars that are involved in accidents with semi-trucks are not as fortunate as we were last March.

I wouldn't wish the misfortune of the experience on anyone, but, it will make you think every time you get into your car.

If it hadn't been for the automatic seatbelts in my father's car that day, I really doubt we would all still be here today.

Jonesboro murders not related to violence shown on television

VIEWPOINT

LISA DETHLOFF

Lisa is a senior in political science. You can send e-mail to Lisa at batman@ksu.edu.

As I was watching the evening news last Tuesday, I was sickened by what I saw. Tuesday evening's news consisted of the ambush at Westside Middle School in Jonesboro, Ark., in which four students and one teacher were killed.

I had not watched the news with such shock and sadness since the bombing in Oklahoma City and still have problems believing two boys were responsible for disrupting the small town. This most recent tragedy once again raises the questions about what influences children to think guns are "cool" and to resort to violence as the only way to resolve conflicts. The news said one of the reasons for the shooting was the anger the older boy felt toward some girls who did not want to date him. It is too much to believe these are middle school students, too young to drive, and they shot down some classmates in cold blood about an incident everyone experiences during the pre-teen and teen-age years.

Now, lawmakers are demanding stricter gun laws and ridding TV shows of violence. Even some of the people I talked to after Tuesday's tragedy said guns should be completely eliminated from households. They said firearms should not be kept in the home for hunting or self-defense. Then, they said they believe Congress should mandate the immediate removal of all network TV show that show any type of violence.

My response to all of these changes is this: Will eliminating possession of firearms or violent shows solve the problem of the increasing amounts of violence used by children?

No, because children are smart, and unfortunately if they want, they can accomplish any violent vendetta.

I do not know why 13-year-old Mitchell Johnson and 11-year-old Andrew Golden triggered a fire alarm and then opened fire on the students and teachers. I do not even believe Johnson and Golden realize the consequences of their action — how many lives, including their own, they have destroyed.

Some people in Jonesboro who know the boys say the two reasons discussed earlier — easy access to guns and violent television — played a significant role. But one solution is not universal.

Making children believe violence is not a means to an end has to be achieved in different ways in different households.

The only solution I have is what I was taught by my parents.

My parents did not ban violent shows from my house and did not need a ratings system to help them determine what shows were acceptable for my sister and me to watch.

I will always have the great memories of watching "The A-Team" — a show that blew up at least one building a week — with my dad. Or watching westerns, such as "Bonanza" and "The Big Valley," with Mom on a weekly basis. We never took shows literally because my parents always said TV shows are for entertaining.

My family had more fun laughing at the way B.A. was drugged to get on an airplane or at how Hoss Cartwright tried to stay out of trouble. My sister and I were taught that special effects created the violent scenes, and in the world outside of TV land, real people would die if those stunts were even attempted.

As for firearms, I can say I have never shot one, and coming from rural Kansas, there is definitely exposure to shotguns and rifles.

The only time I have ever handled a firearm is when I was a junior in high school and took Hunters' Safety and Education with 10- and 11-year-old boys so when guys started listing different guns I could figure out if they were lying or telling the truth.

In the end, I got my orange badge. Once again, my parents stressed the danger of guns. My parents got mad when my sister or I pointed a toy gun at somebody. Dad always said to treat a gun as if it were loaded. By my parents' example, I respect and fear firearms. They can still be used for recreational purposes such as hunting or shooting skeet, but they never solve problems.

I guess what I am trying to point out is that eliminating possible sources of a problem across the board does not solve it, but only creates new ones.

Instead of healing the world in one big effort, all people need to focus on the people around them.

Don't rely on lawmakers for everything. Whether you start in the home, the school or the church, get out there and help.

"WE NEVER TOOK SHOWS LITERALLY BECAUSE MY PARENTS ALWAYS SAID TV SHOWS ARE FOR ENTERTAINING."

READERSwrite

Political correctness has inherent flaws

Editor,
I would like to thank Sam Sackett for not sinking to the level of political correctness.

It is politically incorrect in today's society to say homosexuality is wrong or that it is a sexual perversion. It is politically incorrect not to allow a person whose lifestyle you believe goes against the code and standards of your organization to become a member.

Now, more than ever, it is politically incorrect in America to have a belief, a faith, a moral stand — and to stick to it. It seems it's becoming socially unacceptable to attempt to raise children in a morally safe environment and to try to shield them from perverted influences during their developmental years. Take the Boy Scouts of America, for instance.

Tell me, what is the use of forming an organization, a group devoted to teaching young boys to set a high standard of morals and ethics, if that group cannot stand firm for those morals and ethics on which it was formed? How else can you describe this, other than the clear loss of freedom by Americans, the loss of the freedom to speak out against something they believe is wrong and the loss of the freedom to form a group which shares your beliefs.

What purpose does that organization serve if it is not allowed to maintain members of common belief who may speak with a united voice?

Let's apply this idea to other types of organizations: churches, political groups, et cetera. Is this to say that a church cannot prevent an atheist or cultist from becoming a voting, decision-making church member, one who has an equal say in the direction which the church chooses to take?

Is this to say that a political action committee or a political party cannot prevent someone of opposing beliefs from joining that club and trying to destroy the strength and voice of the club from the inside out? Would it not defeat the purpose of such groups if they were forced to allow people of opposing viewpoints to become members and decision-makers in their organizations?

It is these freedoms we won more than 200 years ago they are trying to take away.

Next, I'd like to comment on the favorite term of liberals — homophobia. Homophobia: the fear of homosexuals? Get real. No one is afraid of them; we simply don't believe the way they live is morally correct, and we don't want to subject our children to their influences.

Come on, left-wingers, if you're going to try to argue that homosexuality is morally correct, or that you will be able to stand before God on Judgment Day and convince him of this, go ahead and try. But don't resort to such childish name-calling. It reminds me of grade school, when an argument eventually lead to a fight and to the words "What are you — chicken?"

If certain people choose to live their lives as homosexuals, I cannot change that however much I disagree with it. The point I will not back down from is where they try to try to force such perverted influences on myself or on my children.

Amy Ashford stated it well in her letter to the editor in the Collegian on March 19 when she wrote, "It is so typical that liberal thinkers always try to silence, run down and mock those people who don't believe as they do."

There are more than a few of us out here, wishing to uphold the values that were taught to our grandparents as children, who will not silently allow our children to be subjected to such influences. If homosexuals want to form clubs of their own, that is fine, but don't take away our freedom to form and maintain clubs which share our common beliefs.

Juice drinks help supply nutrients for health-conscious individuals

make frequent visits to The Juice Stop.

"If you're not a person who eats very well, like many of us are, the drinks are a good way to keep going," she said. "During finals week and the wintertime, when a lot of people are getting sick, it's because they're vitamin- and mineral-deficient."

Wilson also said the drinks contain nutrients that will best meet every individual's nutritional needs.

"I don't think people get the fact that you get enough calories and energy from our drinks, that they can be a meal," Wilson said. "It's a great way to lose a few pounds as well.

"We're in the middle of beef country, so it's hard to get that point across," he said.

Boyer said juice bars have become a trend for all ages and not only for people interested in their daily nutrients.

"The juices are better than fast food, and it's filling," Jamie Simon, sophomore in social work, said. "I like the texture of the drinks and the thickness."

"I go in the mornings because it fills me up all day," Simon said. "It's a meal."

But for some Manhattan residents, the juice scene isn't their favorite.

"I think it's more of a health thing than a taste thing," Brett Niemann, senior in urban community planning, said. "There is not much taste — it's kind of bland."

Niemann said he recommends juice bars to people who keep up with their diet and health.

"I only tried one drink, so others could be better," Niemann said. "But, at the time, I wasn't real impressed."

Boyer said the one thing juice bars have going for them is their healthy products. She said health will always be trendy.

"Almost everyone who comes in says, 'These are so addicting, you just can't help but come in every day,'" Boyer said. "That's what we like to hear."

SPORTS ROUNDUP

Sports Roundup is your daily dose of the latest scores, stats and news from the world of sports outside of K-State. Compiled from Associated Press reports.

Tennessee Volunteers win National Championship 93-75

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Tennessee capped the perfect season by playing the nearly perfect game.

In a masterful, dominating display of running, shooting, passing and rebounding, Tennessee overwhelmed Louisiana Tech 93-75 Sunday night to win a record third-straight NCAA title.

The Lady Vols' 45th-straight victory dating back to last season produced their sixth title, all in the past 12 years, and they finished 39-0 — the most victories ever for a women's team in NCAA play.

The dominating performance added further backing to the claim that this Tennessee team might be the best of all time — and there's not likely to be any letup next season. Coach Pat Summitt's team has only one senior.

Louisiana Tech (31-4) also brought a rich tradition to the championship game, as well as a quick, talented starting five that looked to be good enough to challenge the Lady Vols.

Not on this night, though. Not on a night when Tennessee was at the top of its game.

Chamique Holdseclaw pulled up for jump shots, drove to the basket, passed off to teammates for easy buckets when she was double teamed and did pretty much what she wanted in scoring 25 points.

Freshmen Tamika Catchings and Semeka Randall keyed the Lady Vols' smothering defense that forced the shorter Lady Techsters to take tough shots and rarely gave them a second try.

Catchings scored 27 points, mostly by slashing to the basket or getting offensive rebounds. Randall flew down the court time and time again on Tennessee's devastating fastbreak and finished with 10 points.

And when Louisiana Tech was completely occupied with the three "Meeks," Kellie Jolly would hit a wide open three-pointer. Jolly scored 20, including four three-pointers.

Leonard comes from behind to win Players Championship

PONTE VEDRA BEACH, Fla. — Justin Leonard came from five strokes back Sunday with a closing 67, two strokes more than Tom Lehman and Glen Day, to win The Players Championship and its $720,000 first prize.

The 25-year-old Leonard now has four victories on the PGA Tour, including his win at the British Open last year.

While Leonard was able to draw on his experience under fire to hold up down the stretch at the demanding Stadium Course, Len Mattiace and Day — two guys who have never won — faltered under the pressure.

At one point on the back nine, Leonard, Day and Mattiace were tied at 9-under par. But consecutive bogeys on Nos. 12 and 13 did in Day, and a quintuple bogey 8 by Mattiace on the island-green 17th hole sank his chances.

"It's a lot of fun to be able to shoot a great round on Sunday," Leonard said. "Sometimes you get so involved in shooting low that you forget about winning the tournament."

Rios wins, gains No. 1 ranking

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. — Marcelo Rios is the new No. 1 in men's tennis.

The Chilean, inspired by a Davis Cup-type atmosphere, claimed the top ranking Sunday by beating Andre Agassi 7-5, 6-3, 6-4 in the final at the Lipton Championships.

While the raucous crowd that included hundreds of South Americans traded chants of "Chi-le! Chi-le!" and "U-S-A! U-S-A!", Rios rose to the occasion with a near-flawless performance.

Rios, who entered the tournament at No. 3, will end Pete Sampras' streak of 102 consecutive weeks atop the rankings Monday. The 22-year-old native of Santiago is the first South American to be No. 1 since the ATP rankings began in 1973.

Sampras was upset in the third round by Wayne Ferreira.

Rios is only the second player to earn the No. 1 ranking without having won a Grand Slam. The other was Ivan Lendl in 1983, who went on to win eight majors.

With the win Sunday, Rios earned the most prestigious title of his career and a first prize of $360,000.

Agassi received $190,000 and climbed to 22nd in the rankings, continuing a resurgence that began in November, when he was No. 141.

Lee Smith gives up comeback attempt as Kansas City reliever

HAINES CITY, Fla. — All-time save leader Lee Smith might have put an end to his career when he left the Kansas City Royals camp after the team decided it could not afford to lose a younger pitcher to keep the 40-year-old fastballer.

Smith, who saved 478 games for eight teams in 18 years, was asked on Friday by Royals manager Tony Muser to accept assignment to Triple-A Omaha.

Muser and general manager Herk Robinson are trying to protect youthful relievers Jim Pittsley and Brian Bevil, who are out of options. They would have to be exposed to the waiver wire before they could be sent down.

Tennis team battles weather, foes in Las Vegas

SAM FELSENFELD
Kansas State Collegian

LAS VEGAS — The K-State tennis team spent spring break playing in Nevada.

And in true Las Vegas tradition, the Wildcats started off losing, but wound up breaking even by the end of the trip.

No. 63 K-State lost 5-4 to No. 36 UNLV at its Fertitta Tennis Complex on March 23, but returned to beat Ohio State 6-3 the next day.

Against the Lady Rebels, K-State split its six singles matches and the first two doubles matches, causing the No. 1 doubles match to determine the Cats' fate.

K-State's No. 1 team of Yana Dorodnova and Lena Pilipchak stayed close with UNLV's Gee Gee Garvin and Susie Kocsis, but fell 8-6, giving the Rebels the victory.

Against the Buckeyes, though, the Cats started out stronger, taking four of the six singles matches, forcing Ohio State to sweep the doubles matches to win.

But the Cats won two of the three doubles matches to dispatch the Buckeyes 6-3.

In addition to its opponents, K-State battled against the Las Vegas weather. The Cats are used to the cool winter weather of Manhattan and play inside Ahearn Field House, but the temperatures at the outdoor Fertitta Tennis Complex climbed to more than 80 degrees.

Also, the 20 mph wind played tricks on the ball, and the dry desert air drained the Cats.

"Any time the match is that close, any small thing can be a factor," K-State coach Steve Bietau said. "But we were reasonably well prepared and I think we played fairly well under the conditions."

The Cats struggled at the top of their lineup, where Dorodnova, at No. 1 singles, lost both days. Dorodnova, who brought a 10-1 singles record to Las Vegas, lost 6-3, 6-0 to Garvin and 6-4, 6-4 to Ohio State's Kristy Dascoli.

"I let myself down after yesterday's loss," Dorodnova said after the Cats beat Ohio State. "But I'm happy we won doubles today."

Dorodnova's success before the Las Vegas trip earned her a No. 37 national ranking. Although Garvin was unranked, Bietau said her mentality helped her knock off Dorodnova.

"Garvin played without fear at all times," he said. "To a certain degree, she played not to lose."

Dascoli is ranked 85th, and also had little trouble knocking off the higher-ranked Dorodnova.

"You have to prove yourself every time you play. Yana may not want to give them credit, but the fact is, you have to play the match on the court," Bietau said.

However, Dorodnova regained her winning touch Saturday in Boulder, Colo., winning singles and doubles matches against Colorado. She beat Nadine Kenzelmann 6-1, 6-4, and teamed with Pilipchak to defeat Colorado's 38th-ranked team of Aggie Bek and Anna Bek 8-6.

But the Cats won only two of the other seven matches, suffering another close 5-4 defeat at the hands of Big 12 rival Colorado, dropping K-State's conference record to 2-3.

K-State's next match is at 3 p.m. Wednesday at home against Kansas.

Cats chalk up 3 wins over break, now 11-15 on year

K-STATE SPORTS INFORMATION

While the rest of campus was taking some time off for spring break, the K-State baseball team was hard at work all week.

The Wildcats started break March 20-22 taking on Big 12 foe Texas at Frank Myers Field. K-State fell behind 9-7 in the game, but scored four runs in the bottom of the eighth inning to key an 11-10 win. Third baseman Josh Marn had four hits and three RBIs to lead the Cats to victory.

Texas recovered and won game two of the series by a 10-6 score, powered by four home runs. K-State catcher Yancy Ayres had two hits and two RBIs in a losing effort.

The Cats took the series by winning the rubber match by a 5-3 count. Starting pitcher Pat Hertzler limited Texas to a run and six hits over seven innings while striking out eight Longhorns. Ayres continued his hot hitting, stroking his fourth home run, a two-run blast, to lead K-State to victory.

K-State got right back into action, playing a doubleheader against Howard University on March 23. The Bison jumped out strong and scored six first-inning runs off K-State starter Brad Grogan. The Cats never recovered and lost 11-9. K-State left 16 runners on base in the loss.

The Cats responded to drill the Bison 15-3 to split the doubleheader. The game was halted after seven innings because of the 12-run spread. Ayres drilled another home run in the second game, a grand slam to lead the offense.

K-State traveled to College Station to take on No. 14 Texas A&M in a three-game set this weekend. Friday, the Aggies took advantage of 12 walks by Wildcat pitchers to win 10-2, despite having the same number of hits as K-State — seven. Pitcher Mickey Blount managed to last only one inning, giving up six walks and three earned runs. Blount was charged with the loss to even his record at 1-1.

The Cats fell in Saturday's second game of the series, again allowing 10 runs in a 10-4 loss.

Ayers' torrid hitting stretch continued. He hit a home run in his third-straight game and now has seven on the season. His 15-game hitting streak is a team-high for the season.

Sunday afternoon, the Aggies completed the sweep of the series, using a six-run third inning as a springboard on their way to a 9-5 victory. K-State made six errors in the loss and dropped its 11th-straight road game. Left fielder Brian Bobier hit his first home run of the season, but Ayres' hitting streak ended at 15 games after an 0-for-5 performance.

The series sweep leaves the Cats at 11-15 overall and 3-7 in the Big 12. K-State does not play again until Nebraska visits April 3-5.

Crew team spends spring break in Texas practicing, competing

KELLY DICKSON
Kansas State Collegian

The women's crew team went south for spring break for two reasons.

One was to search for water it could row on. The team has had problems getting on the water at Tuttle Creek Reservoir because of high winds and cold weather conditions. The team used spring break to train in warmer weather and calm water.

"I think training went really well. It gave us a chance to come together and gave us a chance to get some water practice, which we have not had much of yet," Marianne Smyser, senior rower, said.

The second reason was the search for wins against Texas and the University of Tulsa.

The first and second varsity eights won their respective races against Texas on March 22, but the varsity four fell short. On March 28 in Tulsa, the varsity eights raced against each other and the first varsity eight of Tulsa. K-State's first varsity eight won the race, with Tulsa's eight coming in second. The Wildcats' second eight came in third. Smyser was in the second varsity eight for K-State.

"Against Texas it went really well. Against Tulsa it wasn't that great," Smyser said. "We had problems with the coxswain, and we weren't all together the whole time. And when we got to the sprint we just lost it. It just wasn't a good race, at least not for me."

The varsity four had lost to Texas but managed a victory against Tulsa.

"Just recently we won by a large margin in the Tulsa race. That race went really well because we were training during spring break, and we were prepared for the race," Rebecca Riemer, junior rower, said. "We had an advantage because the water during spring break wasn't exactly flat, so what we had learned during training helped us go against the current and win the race."

The majority of spring break was not spent racing other schools. It was spent on the river in Austin, Texas, usually with practices held twice a day.

Junior rower Amanda Kiefer said morning practices were used for seat racing and were generally a harder practice, while afternoons were normally a long, steady-state row.

Seat racing is one of the ways coaches decide who will race in which boat. Long steady-state practices are to build up strength and endurance.

Kiefer said the spring break was helpful to most of the team.

"I didn't get to race at all because I was injured, but I think it went really well overall. Our varsity raced very well and the novices got lots of water time," Kiefer said.

Majerus, Utah to celebrate National Championship in San Antonio

Okay, so maybe I was sniffing way too much rubber cement, drinking an abundance of cheap beer and hallucinating when I wrote Kansas would win the national championship. Yeah, yeah, that's the ticket.

In fact, Roy Williams brought a big, tall, skinny guy with the number 45 tattooed on his forehead into my office and had him point a big Magnum to my temple. Indeed, they made me an offer I couldn't refuse. Yeah, that's what happened.

"Listen, you little sports-writing punk," Williams said, while Raef LaFrentz rubbed the end of the barrel against my skull. "I assure you, you will either write that the Jayhawks will win the championship on that there screen or your brains will be splattered all over it."

So I obviously didn't have a choice when I was filling out my NCAA brackets.

Had I been of free will, I would have penciled Kentucky and Utah into the championship game. After all, it was the obvious choice. Yeah, yeah, that's the ticket.

Now that the Utes and the Wildcats are ready to square off tonight, let's make some predictions based on some deftly thrown together logic.

Kentucky has the better team. Their press is tenacious, they're faster, stronger and shoot just as well as Utah.

But you know what? Utah is playing the best basketball in the country right now. In fact, it's utterly asinine to declare Kentucky the favorite.

Remember last year when the Jayhawks, a No. 1 seed; the Tar Heels, a No. 1 seed; and Kentucky, a No. 1 seed; all ran into Arizona? Arizona was playing the best basketball at the end of the year last season, and they blew each of those No. 1 seeds out of the gym.

Utah is going to kick Kentucky right out of the Alamo Dome. Or at least they're going to walk away with a big fat "W."

Yes, Kentucky is in the final for the third-straight year. The only other teams to do that were Duke and UCLA, although UCLA never did it when the field had 64 teams.

While Kentucky has dominated recent tournaments, the Utes have not reached the final game since 1944. FYI, they won that game.

But history doesn't mean anything. It's all about the future. And the future is an overweight bald man wearing a white sweater, holding a barbecued chicken leg in one hand and a national championship trophy in the other.

Yes, sports fans, that fat man is Rick Majerus. And don't call him Cinderella. Utah was a No. 3 seed; that's not a Cinderella.

Kentucky will press and press and press and press the Utes. And Utah will hit layup after layup after layup.

There are two reasons why Utah will dominate Kentucky's press: Utah point guard Andre Miller and trees. Utah is huge; they have more trees than Brazil. As you have probably heard all week, they can pass over the press. But that's not the real reason Utah will handle the pressure. It's all about Miller time.

If the 6-foot-2-inch Miller, who grabbed 14 rebounds and dropped 16 points to go with his seven assists against North Carolina, has a big game, Utah wins in any scenario. Miller is the real deal. The guy is just over 6 feet, and he dominates the boards like Dennis Rodman.

The key for Kentucky will be shutting down Miller and forcing an up-tempo, full-court game. Miller must be forced into turnovers if Kentucky expects to win this game.

Regardless of who wins tonight, this tournament has been one of the most exciting tournaments in recent memory. We've had so many close games, so many buzzer beater attempts and hits, and we don't have any No. 1 seeds in the final.

ART FACULTY FROM K-STATE HAVE WORKS ON DISPLAY IN THE MARIANNA KISTLER BEACH MUSEUM OF ART. THE WORKS INCLUDE SCULPTURE, PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS AND MIXED MEDIA.

Faculty biennial gleans mixed results from show

Perhaps it's overstating it somewhat to say expectations are high for the first K-State art department faculty biennial at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art.

It's not the first time some of the faculty have had work in the museum. It certainly isn't the first time many of these faculty have shown work in Manhattan. However, it is the first time so many K-State faculty have been brought together in what could have been a very rewarding and thought-provoking museum show.

Instead, the first faculty biennial might be remembered best after it closes on May 24 as a show difficult to remember. Strictly speaking of the show as a museum exhibition, the only thing that really sets it apart from any other typical local show is a small, well-designed companion brochure basically reiterating each artist's statement from the exhibition and listing a few credentials. In a word, the show is museum "lite."

What is most obvious is the lack of any curatorial sense — any explanation for what fills the two largest galleries in the museum. Yes, the artists all particularly happen to be faculty, but is that it? Are we to believe there are no currents of artistic thought running through our fair campus? Apparently, if you have a pulse and happen to be a faculty member of the art department at K-State, this alone warrants inclusion in the biennial.

And the brochure will help little. Instead of offering a directive statement or conclusion, we get three somewhat dull essays. Director Nelson Britt thanks everyone, museum curator Bill North gives us department history and art department head Anna Calluori Holcombe gives us more acknowledgements. Dry stuff indeed. Aside from an art student with particular affiliations with faculty, the essays would only scare off anyone actually interested in the art.

The disservice these oversights ultimately provide is to the artists — the faculty themselves who do so much to enrich the cultural offerings of Manhattan by both creating art themselves and teaching others to create.

The artists provide short statements, both in the brochure and on cards next to their work, but these are independent of any larger context. It's as if there are 23 mini-shows that happen to be in the same museum — insulting because many of these artists warrant more time and space than the show allows.

Some particular standouts include Bob Hower's digital images, especially the engaging "Falling Die" from his Weeping Water Series of 1997-98.

The left side of the rectangular print on paper is dominated by an almost prehistoric bird symbol in an expressionistic tree balanced by faded and blurred dice on the right side. The background is an illusionistic pattern of wavy lines indicative of shallow water over a sandy beach. Digital media continue to evolve with local artists, and Hower's layered, exploratory work perhaps best represents what can be done with it.

Either the K-State Student Union or the administration should make Daniel W. Hunt an offer on his 1997 aluminum, bronze and oak sculpture "Up a Creek," which depicts a squirrel the artist observed while hunting. Hunt includes a humorous narrative explanation ("For a squirrel, he was a pretty good swimmer.") for the wily critter that badly wants to leap off the wood stand that almost bows out from under it. This whimsical sculpture could become a new symbol for this squirrel-infested campus.

Gary Woodward's "Moon Orbit," a 1998 mixed media collage of paper, wood cutouts and leaves, seems a rich connection between a Frank Stella collage and a David Hockney painting. Its playful forms and surprising materials make it one of the small delights of the show.

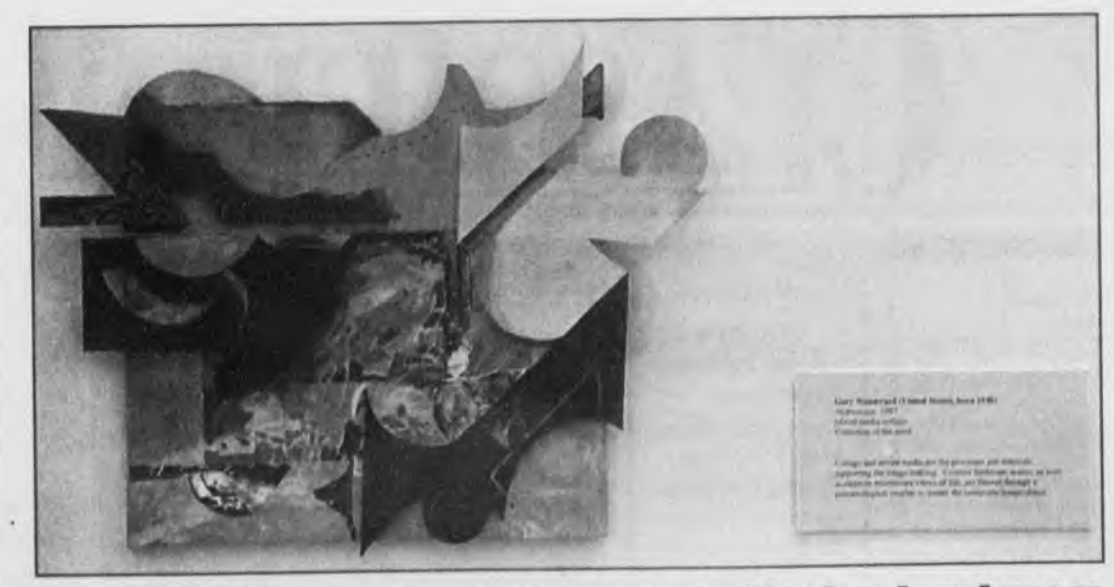

Another would be Lynda Andrus' "Life Unfolding," a 1997 mixed media work of adorned paper tied to a wooden folding clothes line; it incorporates found objects and Asian calligraphy into a synthesis of cultures that celebrates the common as a sublime representation.

The work of many of Manhattan's more well-exhibited artists is also included, specifically Jim Munce's prints, both Yoshiro Ikeda's and Holcombe's ceramics, some drawings by both Margo Kren and Terri Schmidt, Kerry Coppin's photographs and Edward Sturr's photographs of the Konza Prairie. It is somewhat unusual, however, that Coppin, Sturr and Ikeda are simultaneously showing across town together at the Manhattan Center for the Arts. That show allows each artist more resonance, albeit with less curatorial finesse.

But it is an arts center, as opposed to what one expects of a museum. The Beach art museum has given Manhattan some fine shows in the year-and-a-half it's been open, but it's still not entirely sure how to make its shows accessible to a lay public. While one statement placard might be an easy curatorial device, it offers little organizational framework.

In a show of contemporary work such as the faculty biennial, a framework of understanding becomes important if the show is to reach a culturally apathetic campus. The cognoscenti might recognize a show full of department art stars, but a student is more apt to see the disheveled mess the show really is. And that's not fair to anyone.

"HYDROSCOPE" BY GARY WOODWARD IS ONE OF THE WORKS ON DISPLAY DURING THE K-STATE FACULTY BIENNIAL EXHIBIT IN THE MARIANNA KISTLER BEACH MUSEUM OF ART.

FACULTY BIENNIAL EVENTS

The following lectures by K-State faculty coincide with the 1998 Faculty Biennial at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art until May 24. Each lecture begins at 3:30 p.m. in the museum's galleries. Admission to all lectures is free.

The opening reception is from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. April 9 in the museum. Admission is free.

Mandela praises Clinton, holds fast on Cuba, Libya as allies

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Nelson Mandela of South Africa called President Clinton a man of thick skin and strong nerves but stressed Sunday that he will not bend to U.S. pressure to restrict his nation's relations with countries such as Libya and Cuba.

"Libya, Cuba and Iran are my friends, and I propose to honor that friendship," the 79-year-old president said in an interview on CNN's "Late Edition."

Mandela's support for countries the United States regards as hostile or backers of terrorism was one of the few sore spots in Clinton's visit to South Africa that concluded Saturday.

Mandela said his position on Libya, Cuba and Iran, supporters of his long struggle against apartheid, came as no surprise and did not affect the success of his talks with Clinton.

"The president is one of the most decent men

I've come across, and he has got a thick skin and strong nerves," Mandela said. "We emerged from those discussions with our mutual respect enhanced. I really respect President Clinton."

On Friday, Mandela urged Clinton to set an example to all of us and make peace with Libya, Cuba and Iran.

"We profoundly disagree," White House National Security Adviser Sandy Berger said in a later interview on CNN from Africa. "I understand his position, he wants to support the people who supported the freedom movement during all those years. But our position on Libya is also based on moral principles." He said Libya must give up suspects alleged to be behind the 1988 bombing of Pan Am Flight 103. "We have to send a message to terrorists that they cannot outlast us."

House Speaker Newt Gingrich, in a town hall meeting Saturday night in Smyrna, Ga., said Clinton should have differed more forcefully with Mandela. Clinton should have asked him to cut ties with Libya, Gingrich said, because no person who believes in the rule of law can tolerate terrorism.

Mandela also said his country was pleased with the increase of U.S. aid, trade and investment, but questioned an African trade promotion bill that recently passed the House with administration backing.

"Provisions in this bill which would restrict our freedom to trade with other countries is something we find totally unacceptable," he said.

Berger said the bill, which does give the president the authority to decide on the eligibility of countries for certain aid programs, does not have sanctions for third-country trade. But he said he hopes South Africa will comply with international sanctions imposed on Libya.

In a separate interview with Britain's BBC, Mandela says he sometimes misses prison because he had time to think there.

"There is a lot that I miss in my life in prison because there you could sit down and stand away from yourself and look at your track record and be able to discover the mistakes that were made," Mandela said in the interview broadcast Sunday.

Mandela, who spent 27 years in jail under South Africa's previous white-minority government, last week showed Clinton around Robben Island, where he was incarcerated for much of the time.

Mandela also said he would continue working for his African National Congress party when he steps down later this year.

"I will carry out any instructions which they give me, and therefore the long walk is not ended," he said, referring to the title of his autobiography, "Long Walk to Freedom."

"The long walk will end when I am in my permanent resting place, and I have no doubt that I will wear a smile as I am being taken to my everlasting rest because I feel that, whatever problems we have, we have made significant progress."

"No other government in the environment in which we're working could have achieved so much."

Prisoner dies after jumping from 4th floor of federal building

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — A prisoner who jumped from the fourth floor of a federal building died in a Topeka hospital early Saturday.

Randy C. Wood, 33, died at 1:26 a.m. at Stormont-Vail Regional Health Center, a hospital spokeswoman said.

The U.S. Marshal's Service is investigating the death.

Marshals said Wood's hands were in handcuffs behind his back as he was being escorted from a courtroom to a fourth-floor holding cell March 17 at the federal building.

He broke free from his escort, ran down a corridor, rounded a corner and jumped over a railing, falling three stories into the building's atrium.

Minutes earlier, U.S. Magistrate Ronald C. Newman had revoked Wood's bond and ordered him to remain in custody in a case in which Wood was charged with a felony count of conspiracy with intent to distribute methamphetamine.

Authorities said it isn't clear whether Wood was trying to escape or commit suicide.

2nd man convicted in death of woman killed in meth lab fire

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — A second man was convicted of murder in the death of a woman killed when a methamphetamine lab caught fire.

A Wyandotte County jury on Friday convicted Thomas Finley, 32, of first-degree murder and manufacturing of methamphetamine in the Oct. 1 death of LaDonna Jones, 31.

George Lamac, 35, was convicted a week earlier on the same charges.

Wyandotte County Assistant District Attorney Sheryl Lidtke said the pair was making the addictive drug in an upstairs room in Finley's house when the accident occurred. They were attempting to make the drug even though the house did not have utilities.

About eight people were living in the house when the fire occurred. Witnesses said the drug was being cooked on an electric skillet powered by an extension cord hooked up to a house next door and stretched to the upstairs room.

During the cooking process a liquid chemical concoction caught fire, spilled onto the floor and set the area on fire, witnesses said.

Jones could not escape.

Finley's attorney, Bill Mahoney, said his client was not home when the fire erupted and had no idea any drugs were being manufactured in the house. He said Finley came home and discovered the fire and that he tried to run upstairs and save the woman.

Mahoney said that after seeing the body, Finley was shocked and scared and fled the scene. Finley then checked into a hotel and later went to a hospital for treatment for burns.

A sentencing date has yet to be set.

THREE SMART REASONS TO CONSIDER THE ARMY:

Reason 1: We can help you get an edge on college expenses with up to $40,000 from the Montgomery GI Bill plus the Army College Fund...if you qualify.

Reason 2: There are over 50 challenging high-tech specialties to choose from. Valuable training in one could lead to a rewarding and exciting career.

Reason 3: Employers look for the training and personal qualities of Army alumni. Here's what just one business leader says:
"Army alumni bring to their job...a wealth of experience that is readily adjustable to the business world."

Murderer executed this morning

ASSOCIATED PRESS

STARKE, Fla. — During a bloody six-day rampage in 1985, Daniel Eugene Remeta killed a convenience store clerk in Florida, a grocery clerk in Arkansas, and a restaurant manager and two grain elevator employees in Kansas.

Thirteen years after the crime spree that also left two people wounded, Remeta was scheduled to die in Florida's electric chair today. He ordered snow cones for his last meal, said Gene Morris, spokesman for the state Department of Corrections.

"We'll see what we can do to produce them for him," Morris said.

His lawyer on Monday asked the Florida Supreme Court to stop the execution, and if rejected, he planned to go to the U.S. Supreme Court with a similar request. But last-minute appeals failed to save the three killers Florida has electrocuted since March 23, including "Black Widow" killer Judy Buenoano on Monday.

Remeta, 40, was condemned and sentenced in 1986 for killing Mehrle "Chet" Reeder, a 60-year-old clerk in Ocala.

A native of Traverse City, Mich., Remeta left for Florida with a girlfriend and a friend in late January 1985. He had a .357-caliber pistol the girlfriend had stolen from her father.

They turned up days later, on Feb. 8, at a convenience store in Ocala, about 50 miles south of the prison with Florida's electric chair. Remeta walked up to the counter to buy bubble gum. When Reeder rang up the purchase and opened the cash register, Remeta shot him.

As Reeder fell, Remeta shot him again, then walked around the counter and shot Reeder twice more before stealing about $52 from the cash register.

Two days later, Remeta was in a convenience store in Waskom, Texas. He forced Camellia Carroll, the 18-year-old cashier, outside and shot her five times. She survived and testified against him in Florida.

A day later, on Feb. 11, Remeta was in Mulberry, Ark., where he killed Linda Marvin, a grocery store clerk who was shot 10 times.

During another robbery two days later, Remeta killed Larry McFarland, manager of Stuckey's restaurant in Grainfield, Kan. Then he kidnapped Glenn Moore and John R. "Rick" Schroeder from a grain elevator and shot them dead on a dirt road near Colby, Kan.

He also shot a county undersheriff, Ben Albright, who tried to stop him before he reached the grain elevator. Albright survived, as did the manager of the grain elevator. He, too, was shot by Remeta.

The violence ended in a gun battle with police in an unoccupied farmhouse

The name Daniel Remeta doesn't really have much meaning for most K-State students. For K-State students from Colby, Kan., however, it reopens a chapter of their town's history they would rather keep closed.

On Feb. 13, 1985, Remeta finished his three-week national crime spree in Kansas. He left Larry McFarland, a manager in a restaurant near Grainfield, Kan., dead along with two grain elevator workers, Rick Schroeder and Glenn Moore, whom he killed execution style on a dirt road. He shot and wounded an undersheriff, Ben Albright, and the elevator manager, Maurice Christie.

On May 13, 1985, he pleaded guilty to murder and was later given four life sentences.

In 1998 the crime has not been forgotten.

"I went home last weekend. My dad is the judge, and everywhere we went, everyone kept coming up and asking him about it," Clay Schiffner, senior in kinesiology, said.

Senior dies in highway car wreck

A K-State senior in elementary education was killed in an automobile accident during spring break.

Tim Pentico, 25, died in a construction zone at 11:59 a.m. March 23 on state Highway 13, one mile south of Clinton, Mo.

According to the Missouri Highway Patrol, a tractor-trailer struck Pentico's car from behind and rolled over it. John Prince, a Henry County coroner, said Pentico died of massive chest trauma.

The two vehicles struck another car, starting a chain reaction that involved four more vehicles — seven in all. Also killed was Reta Delaney, 39, flagwoman for the construction zone. The driver of one car was injured and taken to Golden Valley Hospital in Clinton.

Tim Pentico was a 1991 graduate of Concordia High School. He had attended K-State since fall 1995. His father, Derry Pentico, said he had majored in drafting and architecture at local Cloud County Community College before transferring to K-State and changing his major to education.

"With his quiet way, I think he'd have been a fine teacher," Joan Pentico, Tim Pentico's mother, said.

Tim Pentico's funeral was Friday at Our Lady of Perpetual Help Catholic Church in Concordia. Derry Pentico said a scholarship fund has been started in his son's name. Donations can be sent through Chaput-Buoy Funeral Home at 325 W. Sixth, Concordia, Kan. 66901. The telephone number is (785) 243-2121.

"He had a way to win his way into everyone's heart," Derry Pentico said.

Regents plan not well received, might die before becoming reality

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The ambitious House plan for restructuring how Kansas' institutions of higher education are managed appeared to have hit a dead end in two Senate committees.

But House leaders were not ready to concede defeat, in spite of the less-than-hospitable reception their plan got Monday in the Senate Ways and Means and Education Committees.

The two panels had a two-hour joint hearing, then Chairman Dave Kerr of the Budget Committee and Chairwoman Barbara Lawrence of the Education Committee said they don't think there is enough time left to work through legislation making such a significant overhaul of the state's post-secondary governance system.

Both said they would poll their committees for sentiment on whether to proceed, but Kerr, R-Hutchinson, said it likely would require meetings throughout the Legislature's planned April 10-29 recess to work through the resolution and bill adequately.

He indicated he doesn't think his committee will want to do that, given the budget work it has left to finish.

Kerr also was skeptical whether the state could afford to grant $190 million in tax relief this year and also finance the higher education restructuring plan, which he said would cost $150 million over four years.

"Given the very limited amount of time remaining in the session, it would be very difficult in my view for us to do an adequate job of working the bill," Kerr said.

"The need to do something is not so urgent that we should rush through it in the remaining time of the session and turn out a product that is something less than the best."

Senate President Dick Bond referred a resolution needed to accomplish the plan to the Budget Committee and the bill to implement it to the Education Committee.

Despite the unenthusiastic Senate reception, Speaker Tim Shallenburger and Chairman David Adkins of the Select Committee said they are not ready to concede the plan has no chance of winning Senate approval this session.

"We're not through yet. We're not giving up," said Shallenburger, R-Baxter Springs. "They've had the hearing. Now they can reflect on that."

Adkins, R-Leawood, said, "I'm not willing to send up a white flag yet. I think we have created an opportunity that I would hate to see them squander just because it's late in the session."

While conceding he has "not much leverage," in the Senate, there is always "sweet talk," to try to get the plan considered, Shallenburger said. Adkins said he is

E-mail usage policy affects students, faculty

SHERYL WILLIAMS
Kansas State Collegian

There's more to K-State e-mail than launching messages into cyberspace.

Most students don't realize e-mail policies exist, and Harvard Townsend, system associate in Computing and Network Services, wants students to make themselves aware of them and abide by them.

"Just because it's on the Internet or the World Wide Web doesn't mean anything goes," Townsend said. "It seems like students come and they get into this new, free environment, and they kind of go crazy and say things they wouldn't normally say and do things they wouldn't do, because it's online."

"They feel like it's anonymous, but most of the time it isn't, because there are transaction logs that are available, and it can often be tracked down," he said.

Townsend said CNS does not actively monitor transactions but responds to complaints.

"Most of the problems with e-mail are just violations of policy, and in some cases, law," he said. "I wouldn't say it's common, but it does happen — anonymously sending a message that's of a sexual nature, pornographic pictures as attachments."

An average of 170,000 messages flow through K-State's central mail server every 24-hour period Monday through Friday.

Faculty, staff, students and other special accounts make up the nearly 27,000 accounts using e-mail at K-State.

Townsend said at one time there was an issue of a small percentage of users who were not managing their mailboxes properly and they became too large. In one case, a student was using about 135 megabytes of disk space for mail, which, he said, meant the mail wasn't being used.

"It would take two weeks for Pine to open that mailbox," Townsend said, referring to a popular e-mail program.

"We had proposed trying to enforce people managing their mailboxes, but rather than put more restrictions on people, we ended up just buying more disk space," he said. "We doubled the disk space and postponed the problem, basically. We sure wish people would manage their mailbox space, but right now, it's not a problem."

Instances of e-mail abuse can be reported to CNS by filling out a complaint form in person, on the Web or by e-mailing CNS. However, Townsend said if people are being harassed, such as receiving death threats, they should report it in person.

"If it's something like a harassment issue, then we need to get it on paper and start the process formally. Then, depending on the nature of it, we've got different agencies that handle the different types of problems on campus," Townsend said. "In a lot of the cases, the fact that it happened online is irrelevant."

Townsend said sexual harassment is handled by the Office of Affirmative Action. Criminal acts such as legitimate death threats are handled by the K-State Police. Cases involving students in the residence halls using their computers for illegal activity are handled by the Department of Housing and Dining Services.

"That violates their contracts as well as the K-State policies," he said.

Less serious policy violations will result in a warning or blocking of the account.

"When they try to log in, it tells them to call us, then we either talk to them over the phone about it, or if it's more serious, we'll call them in to a meeting," he said.

Naomi Beck, freshman undecided, said she was unaware of any policies for using e-mail and didn't realize her mail could be retrieved by the university.

"I thought that when I sent it, it was gone," Beck said. "I didn't know other people had access to it."

The K-State e-mail policy is posted on the Unclassified Affairs and University Compliance Web site at www.ksu.edu/uauc/docs/email.html. CNS also has policies and procedures posted at www.ksu.edu/cns/policy/policy.html.

First-ever legal career preview to give students inside look at routine of lawyers

K-State students soon will have an opportunity to experience the realities of a law career.

The first-ever K-State Legal Career Preview will begin soon. An informational meeting for interested students will be at 4 p.m. Thursday in Union 207.

Beth Powers, pre-law adviser, said the program is designed to give students an inside look at a lawyer's daily routine.

"As pre-law adviser, I've found a lot of students never set foot in a law firm. They don't really know what a lawyer does. They only know what they see on TV. We've designed an experience to let students see what lawyers do on a day-to-day basis," Powers said.

The program will pair students with attorneys whom they will be able to visit during a typical day at their workplace.

Tim Henderson, who used to practice law and is now assistant director of Career and Employment Services, said he could have benefited from a program such as this before he applied to law school.

"A lot of people don't really think about what lawyers do. Their main concern is getting admitted to a good school instead of longer-range goals and plans," Henderson said. "I only thought about getting admitted. I never thought about what would happen after that."

Henderson said response from the attorneys has been strong.

"We did a mailing in February, and the response has been tremendous. We focused on K-State alumni, and it really indicates the pride and loyalty K-State alums have in their school to be willing to take out time to help increase students' understanding of a law career," Henderson said.

Students will have the opportunity to be paired with attorneys in many areas of practice such as government, civil litigation, corporate and criminal law. Judges have also indicated interest. The attorneys are in Manhattan, Topeka, Salina, Wichita and the Kansas City area.

Henderson said this program also could open up job opportunities for students.

"This is a chance to make some contacts. Firms are always hiring. They need people to do runner work and reception-type responsibilities. Some of the lawyers who responded have indicated they are open to looking at people for summer employment," Henderson said.

Powers said the program is open to any student who is interested in a law career.

"This is for students who are thinking seriously about becoming lawyers but don't really know what they do on a daily basis. It's for those considering it seriously enough to want some answers," Powers said.

New law would require police to notify parents before taking youths into custody

TOPEKA — Law enforcement officials would have to notify parents immediately if their children younger than age 14 are taken into police custody under an amended bill passed by the House.

The 118-3 vote Monday returned the bill to the Senate so that it can consider the changes the House made last week.

The reworked bill also would mandate that youngsters couldn't be questioned by a police officer without a parent, guardian or attorney present.

"It doesn't go as far as I want, but it's as good as we can do at this time of the year given the time constraints," said Rep. Tom Klein, D-Wichita, who added the language.

Earlier this month, the Kansas Supreme Court ruled that children younger than 14 must be allowed to consult parents, a guardian or attorney before they can waive their rights and be questioned.

Klein said his amendment would make that ruling part of state law by requiring police to notify a parent, guardian or attorney immediately after a child is taken into custody.

That currently isn't required by law but is done as a matter of policy by many police agencies.

Genetically engineered hormone allows those with angina to grow own bypasses

ATLANTA — For the first time, doctors have shown that injections of a genetically engineered hormone can help people with bad hearts grow their own bypasses — an approach that could someday offer an alternative to surgery and angioplasty.

The hormone, which occurs naturally in the body, triggers the heart to sprout tiny vessels to carry blood around blockages that cause angina pain. The results of the first experimental use, released Monday, showed that the treatment eased angina in 13 of the 15 people treated.

The results are considered very preliminary, and the doctors caution that much more testing will be needed to know precisely how well it works.

Nevertheless, Dr. Timothy D. Henry of the University of Minnesota, who directed the study, said, "We are excited by this. It is a unique approach to treating coronary artery disease."

About 1 million Americans a year undergo either bypass or angioplasty. A bypass involves grafting tiny pieces of blood vessel onto the heart to shuttle blood around blocked sections of artery. Angioplasty uses a tiny balloon, threaded into the heart, to squeeze open narrowed passages temporarily.

If all goes as the researchers hope, natural proteins called growth factors could offer a new alternative, especially for those who have already failed the standard approaches or cannot be helped by them.

In this experiment, doctors injected genetically engineered vascular endothelial growth factor, or VEGF (pronounced vedge-EFF). The protein is made by Genentech Inc., which paid for the experiment.

All of the men and women had serious chest pain and could not be treated by angioplasty or bypass surgery.

Among those helped was a man in his early 50s who had already had two bypasses and two angioplasties, yet was still crippled by angina. The growth hormone appeared to relieve his condition almost completely.

Henry said the man told him that "the only side effect was that he had to go back to work."

Doctors performed angiograms — X-ray movies of the heart arteries — on seven of the patients. Five of them showed significant growth of tiny blood vessels the width of a hair. Others tests indicated that the patients' heart tissue was getting more oxygen.

Henry described the results at a meeting in Atlanta of the American College of Cardiology. The study was conducted at Hennepin County Medical Center in Minneapolis and five other hospitals.

"This absolutely looks promising," said Dr. Judith L. Swain of Stanford University. "This is a technology that's here."

Dr. Michael Mann of Harvard Medical School called the research "a critical and bold step that sets the stage for larger studies" to answer whether this approach truly works.

Legacy of a tragedy

Middle school takes steps to prevent similar incident

CLAUDETTE RILEY
Kansas State Collegian

Administrators at Dwight D. Eisenhower Middle School have implemented programs to help the 460 seventh- and eighth-graders resolve conflicts and deal with interpersonal conflicts.

After last week's deadly ambush by two students at Westside Middle School in Jonesboro, Ark., that left four students and a teacher dead, these hard-target prevention programs are gaining more attention.

Jim Kenworthy, principal at Dwight D. Eisenhower, said he made an announcement Monday morning that counselors would be available to talk to students struggling to understand the Arkansas tragedy.

"The way that particular event went down, it's unrealistic to expect school officials to have gone out and walked the perimeter of the yard before the fire drill," Kenworthy said.

"We have a crisis plan and limit access to the building, but not all situations can be anticipated."

Kenworthy said a lot of problems can be avoided by listening to students and paying attention to their problems.

"We have kids that on any given day run the gamut of emotions. They make new friends and break old relationships on a daily basis," Kenworthy said. "We take things very seriously because they do."

Last fall, Dwight D. Eisenhower implemented a peer mediation program to help facilitate solutions for students in conflict.

What do we think?

Check out the editorial board's opinion about the Jonesboro incident. See Page 4.

Students, especially those involved in "he said/she said" conflicts, can be referred by a concerned third party.

The peer mediator helps students resolve conflicts by establishing ground rules, defining problems, listening actively and then guiding the students toward a resolution.

"Often, the two parties in conflict are not talking, and the problems are being encouraged by a third party," Kenworthy said. "We started this to reduce the number of physical conflicts at school."

The program has been successful, with 98 percent of the students not engaging in subsequent conflicts, he said.

"It's important that students be heard and can talk if they have concerns," Kenworthy said.

This openness is echoed by school teachers and staff, who monitor the halls between classes and stop people in the halls to verify student identification badges.

Kenworthy said safety precautions stem from preventive measures, including limiting access to the building. After classes start in the morning, there are only two open entrances, and both are monitored.

Security precautions at the middle school also include a public address call to lock down rooms if an intruder has been spotted in the halls.

"Weapons are always a concern, even bringing a pocket knife to school is considered a weapon, and the discipline is severe," Kenworthy said.

"Even though it may not seem harmful, we take it very seriously, and parents are very supportive and understand it's not appropriate," he said.

Kenworthy said the school also has established a code of conduct for students that encourages incentives for good behavior.

Classes resume after Arkansas schoolyard shooting

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JONESBORO, Ark. — Some reluctant pupils had to be coaxed out of their parents' cars Monday as Westside Middle School got back to the business of learning after four classmates and a teacher were killed in a schoolyard ambush.

The rules were bent a little — classes were allowed to be noisier, for example — and students read cards and letters from people around the world before classes met for the first time since the March 24 shootings.

Twenty-two of the school's 239 students were absent Monday, 10 more than on a normal day. A dozen counselors were on hand to ease the transition from grief to learning.

Pupils came to school Thursday for grief counseling.

Friday previously had been scheduled as a day off.

Two students at the school, Mitchell Johnson, 13, and Drew Golden, 11, are accused of using stolen weapons to gun down the victims during a fake fire alarm.

Ten were wounded; three — including a teacher — remained hospitalized Monday.

Johnson and Golden are being held on five counts each of murder and 10 counts of battery pending an April 29 hearing.

The fire alarms at the school had been disconnected Thursday because many students said they would be frightened if the alarms went off again. The alarms apparently had been reconnected for Monday's classes.

"I've been instructed to say we are in compliance with restrictions," said Connie Tolbert, secretary to the school district superintendent.

She refused to elaborate.

Jonesboro murders stimulate questions, concerns

The deadly ambush last week at a middle school in Jonesboro, Ark., signified more than an alarming trend of child-instigated rage and murder.

In the wake of this horrific afternoon massacre that left five dead and twice as many injured, a rural community and a nation face endless questions and heart-breaking realities.

Though miles and states away, this scene played out powerfully in Manhattan, and although this community has not been a victim in the same way, it's dangerous to assume that similar violence could not happen here.

In fact, denial and a false sense of security cannot shelter this community or any other from such a senseless act of violence. We cannot stick our heads in the sand and hope this type of behavior goes away. We have to deal with what happened in Jonesboro and look at why it occurred.

This incident in particular leaves a lot of room for overreacting, and while it's normal to be cautious and maybe a little fearful, it's more productive to focus on solutions.

Gun control in itself cannot be the answer. However, responsible use and care of guns is important, and parents restricting or monitoring young people's access to weapons is a no-brainer.

The use of guns and violence is absolutely not the answer, and gun-users have to understand the possible consequences of their behavior. When a gun is involved, there is always a chance someone will be injured or killed.

School safety is also crucial, although the fire drill tactic used at the Westside Middle School seems unpreventable. It's important to balance caution with realistic solutions. Parents can no longer afford to take school safety for granted. However, schools cannot become a prison or day-care center.

The peer mediation program at Dwight D. Eisenhower Middle School should be applauded because its goal is increasing communication and empowering individual students to find the solutions.

Frankly, there is a lot of room for prevention and education by every parent, sibling and friend. It has to start in homes and schools. There isn't just one answer. We can all be part of the solution if we break out of thinking about ourselves long enough to think and listen to others.

Children have to have a forum for their thoughts and an outlet for their emotions. Parents, older siblings and friends can provide an opportunity for them to discuss their problems.

People have instincts but have to be taught how to manage their feelings and work through problems to find a solution.

It would be easy to say the Arkansas shootings are merely a symptom of our society or start to point the finger at one person or another. However, it's far more productive to get involved in the lives of young people and open lines of communication.

The re-release of the classic movie musical celebrates the best of tough guys, cool girls and growing up.

With deference to my English teachers, it ain't gonna happen. Why?

Because it's time you lightened up.

After my whirlwind trip last week to San Francisco, I'm not about to complain about whatever ridiculousness of the moment exists. And there is a cornucopia of ridiculousness to choose from.

For example, while I'm no defender of Southerners, it's ridiculous to say they are predisposed to violence like the shooting at the middle school in Jonesboro, Ark., simply because they grew up with guns. That's like saying I enjoy watermelon and fried chicken as a steady diet. Get my point?

No complaints either about the professor at Arizona State University who's allegedly being fired for sexual harassment. Not because he looked up some coed's pom-pom, but because he's teaching Shakespeare, Moliere and other male playwrights. He's accused of creating a hostile work environment by not espousing the virtues of women. So much for trying to just plain teach.

Nope, the debates about gays in the Boy Scouts of America (whose business is it anyway?), or whether I can continue to tell dirty jokes (which are really good) mean nothing when you consider the historic event that took place in our country 20 years ago.

"Grease" was the word, having been released on the big screen for the first time. Young love between people of different backgrounds, their crazy friends and some of the best times in life that one could ever have. Probably my most favorite movie of all time.

Now in re-release, "Grease" is still the word. Sure, it's been two decades, but how much has really changed? Actually, nothing. In fact, this time the movie offers a stronger resemblance to life than it did before.

Look at Sandy. A wholesome, innocent, virginal lass thrown into the cage of birdbrains, uh, T-birds. Totally out of her element. Doesn't she remind you of me?

I, too, am wholesome, innocent, virginal — stop me if you've heard this before. You still don't believe it, do you? Well, 20 years ago I was almost a Sandy. This time around, I've enjoyed a little of everything, from alcohol to men. Even alcoholic men. And as graduation approaches, I look back and say it's been a hell of a ride.

I've even seen a Sandy or two run around this campus during my two years here. They start out smelling baby-powder fresh and end up hunched over porcelain bowls smelling like last night's drink specials.

Of course, all the guys I knew, and some girls, too (early lesbians they were), wanted to be Danny Zuko. Who wouldn't? Handsome, sexy and a hit with the ladies. Tough on the outside, nothing but pussycat on the inside. Gotta love guys and gals who act one way with the one they love, then act another way with their friends. Yep, that's changed a lot.

Nowadays any guy would be thrilled at the prospect of telling "the boys" that he's taking the little woman to the art museum, or going to see some chick flick such as "My Best Friend's Wedding."

So much for the sensitive male. Maybe that's why we enjoy the rough-edged man once or twice, until we end up with bruises. Then it's on to someone who might not set our hormones aflutter, but takes us as is. Besides, if they ever aged Danny Zuko, 20 years probably wouldn't be too kind to him anyway.

Even if you've never seen "Grease" — and that would be blasphemy — you must know someone like Rizzo. Whether in a small town or a large metro area, every high school has a resident floozy. Ultra hip and cool, feels the need to sleep with everybody, tinkers with teen pregnancy — well, you know the rest.

Fortunately this wasn't an achievement I aspired to in my rock 'n' roll high school, although I did flirt with the idea. On the big screen this role was and is played by actress Stockard Channing.

Today it's not just a woman's role. All my years in radio lead me to believe that this floozy is the stuff male disc jockeys are made of.

The people of "Grease" didn't just have groove or meaning. So, too, did the music. Yes, I'm still the big Metallica, Ozzy or Pearl Jam fan I've always been (doesn't quite go with my picture, does it?). But before long-haired musicians turned my head, the Bee Gees and Sha-Na-Na were worthy of grooving. Today I'm sure they'd be Grammy winners.

Remember "You're the One that I Want?" Back then it was Sandy and Danny's song. Today it's the Kenneth Starr's love poem to President Clinton.

"Hopelessly Devoted to You" would have to be the theme song for the 35-year-old teacher and her 14-year-old lover.

"Beauty School Dropout." Four words: Paula Jones, Linda Tripp.

"Born to Hand Jive." What do you call an educational institution that charges a moderate tuition, but ridiculous fees and ancillary expenses?

"There Are Worse Things I Could Do." Like find any excuse during the next seven weeks not to graduate. Hey, I'm on deadline. My job in San Francisco starts on June 1.

Amid the sad and unnecessary drivel taking place in our country, it's probably not a bad idea to celebrate anniversaries such as this one. Having a day in honor of significant turns in history, light as they might be, gives me a chance to reflect on times gone by and relate them to where I am now. Surely I've made some positive contributions to my life in 20 years. And it gives me a chance to grow and reflect on the stupid mistakes I've made along

Manhattan-bound spring break spawns ideas for yarns

There's a silent fellowship on this campus. Men, women and small animals linked together through a common curse: They were in Manhattan last week. There are those who'd have you believe it was a sin not to spend a week of liberation from the shackles of academia gallivanting across the country or killing half your gray matter in a beachside alcoholic frenzy.

Most of those people work for MTV.

The rest of them you might run into in the next few days — odds are you have already.

So what do you tell them? That leisure and relaxation was your priority over transportation and accommodation? That rest and relaxation mattered more than miles per gallon and blood alcohol content, spare time more than spare tire? You could try, but sometimes expressing this sentiment adequately is impossible.

Therefore, at no cost or obligation to you, I'd like to provide these ready-cut, easy-to-handle spring break prefabricated experiences for you to adapt and incorporate into your next small-talk encounter.

I spent several days afloat in the Caribbean before landing in the Bahamas and being courted by a horde of baseball scouts.

I'm getting my own baseball card in May.

I watched my tapes of all of the episodes of "Matlock" non-stop. It wasn't that bad. The doctor says I should be able to walk in a straight line again in a matter of weeks.

My computer just got done number-crunching most of the spring training games. According to my statistics, if we watch the Royals play the last game in June, we can see them get mathematically eliminated from the playoffs.

I spent $200 million, made a movie about a bunch of people drowning and freezing, and bought a bunch of little gold statues; I built a desk out of them. The Pentagon's financing my next movie.

I built a long-range ballistic missile, armed it with a thermonuclear device I cobbled together from the parts of a '73 Pinto, and seceded from the United States. My house is now the first state of the Pasture States.

Would you like to join? Two of my neighbors said they'd join, soon as they cobble up 200 years of back taxes.

I took a tour of Africa, planted a tree, had coffee with Nelson Mandela and met a child named after me. Kenneth Starr later subpoenaed the mother.

I repainted, to the smallest detail, Michelangelo's interior of the Sistine Chapel on the inside of the roof of my car. I'm parked in Aggieville.

I sent a check to my congressman, and my plastic pool in the back yard was declared one of the Great Lakes. Would you like to come swimming in the Great Lake of Manhattan?

I genetically created and synthesized the monsters from "Aliens" and "Predator" into an unearthly killing machine programmed with the sole task of hunting down and eviscerating the Spice Girls. I'm now taping CNN 24 hours a day. Just wait.

I discovered a 10-mile wide asteroid hurtling toward the earth at an astronomical speed. It should hit sometime tonight, wiping out all life as we know it. I thought about telling someone, but it's been so busy around here — so, what're you doing tonight?

I was the guest host of "Saturday Night Live."

I built a scale model of campus out of LEGOs, then populated it with figures to represent K-State personalities, then laid waste to it with my X-Men figures. Professor X ran over President Jon Wefald, Wolverine tore down the new alumni center, and Manny Dies cornered Cyclops in Bramlage Coliseum.

Students support death for killer Regents reform plan may die in Senate

gy, moved away from Colby in 1989 but still remembers the day of the shootings well. He was 10 years old.

"I was at school. I was going to school with some kids that knew people that were supposed to be at the elevator. They were getting worked up, because right when it first happened, the names of the people who were hurt or killed weren't released," Higerd said.

Higerd said at one point they almost let school out because they hadn't caught anybody, and they didn't know where the killers were.

"It was crazy," he said. "It is something you only hear about happening in the big city or on TV. It was just crazy."

Regardless of what they might remember from that day, students from Colby have an opinion on what should happen now.

"Lately, he said he didn't do it. He changed his mind and said he took the rap for someone else. Whatever he has been saying lately is a bunch of b.s. Personally, I think they should execute him," Jason Haremza, senior in chemical science, said.

Originally, Remeta told reporters in Kansas he wanted to be extradited to Florida because it imposes capital punishment.

He also told the Detroit Free Press, "I want them to pull the switch. I'm not afraid. Death is only as ugly as you make it."

Lawyers and Remeta's mother pleaded to the jury to spare his life because of a miserable childhood. He had a father who allegedly abused him and two alcoholic parents.

Regardless of Remeta's upbringing,

Higerd said he agreed with Haremza.

"It's a tough call. I don't really know what I think," Higerd said. "Obviously, I am going to think something different because it is close to home, but I always question if people are really guilty. There are cases where people are falsely convicted. But in this case, I am pro just for the fact we know he is guilty. What he did, it was cold."

Remeta's execution might be able to close the chapter in Colby's history for the students at K-State and for the town.

"I read about it again for the first time today, and it made me remember back to what had happened that day. The article probably affected me more than it would just anybody," Higerd said. "I know it would help to close it for me. What happened can't be totally justified, but his execution is the next step."

certain leaders will continue to discuss the plan.

The plan abolishes the Kansas Board of Regents and replaces it with a new Council on Higher Education that would govern the six state universities, bring Washburn University into the state system and coordinate program activities of the state's 19 community colleges and 11 vocational-technical schools.

Monday's testimony produced nothing new: The regents continue to oppose the plan, arguing they can assume coordination of community colleges according to the present governance setup; 18 of 19 community colleges support the proposal, with only Johnson County Community College opposed, and Washburn University strongly endorses it.

Both Regents Chairman Bob Talkington, a former Senate president from Iola, and Sheila Frahm, a former Senate majority leader and now executive director of the community college trustees association, had a tinge of sarcasm in their testimony — indicative of the distrust between the two sides.

"I was particularly pleased that Chairman Adkins called members of the Board of Regents statespeople — apparently untrustworthy, but statespeople nonetheless," Talkington said.

"Community colleges are not 'hungry puppies' as one member of the Board of Regents put it, who should be taken care of only after the state university families' needs are met," Frahm said.

Man condemned for multi-state murder spree executed in Florida electric chair this morning in Atwood, Kan. Mark Walters, 18, of Suttons Bay, Mich., who was traveling with Remeta, died in the gunfight.

Remeta was sentenced to life for the Kansas murders and the death in Arkansas.

In a videotaped interview shown to jurors in his Florida trial, Remeta chuckled as he described killing the grain elevator workers.

"I don't know, I just did it," he said. "I don't even think about it."

Remeta told The Florida Times-Union in a story published Monday that he didn't kill anyone in Florida or Kansas. He also said he wasn't afraid of the electric chair.

"There ain't a death chamber in the world that can actually hurt me," Remeta said.

During the electrocution of Pedro Medina in March 1997, a foot-long flame erupted from his headpiece, but no fire appeared during the executions last week of Gerald Stano and Leo Jones or during the Buonoano execution.

Still, Remeta's lawyer argued in documents filed with the state's top court that there were problems with the electrical current during the Stano and Jones executions.

Player apologizes for accusing player of using racial slurs

SAN ANTONIO — Utah's Britton Johnson never used a racial slur during the NCAA Tournament semifinals and he accepted an apology from his accuser, just hours before Monday's national title game with Kentucky.

Johnson said North Carolina's Makhitar Ndoye spit on him, and Ndoye initially accused Johnson of calling him a "nigger" following Utah's 65-59 victory over the No. 1 Tar Heels on Saturday night.

Utah coach Rick Majerus was so sure Johnson didn't use the slur he had pledged to resign if it turned out to be true.

On Monday, North Carolina coach Bill Guthridge and Ndoye (pronounced Jeye) met for about 15 minutes in Chapel Hill, N.C., then issued an apology to Johnson, Majerus and the entire Utes team.

"It's unfortunate this whole thing happened," Johnson said in a telephone interview from his hotel room six hours before the championship game against the Wildcats. "In a way, I feel bad for the kid. He's a senior and it was his last game. Some people don't think before they do things."

"It's really nice that he apologized — it helps out a lot," added Johnson, a freshman reserve for the Utes. "I wouldn't in a million years ever use that word."

Lue to announce future plans in press conference today

LINCOLN, Neb. — Nebraska's leading scorer, Tyrone Lue, will announce today whether he plans to forego his senior year and enter the NBA draft. NU athletic department officials said.

Citing an unidentified source, the Omaha World-Herald reported Lue will enter the NBA draft.

The All-Big 12 junior point guard has talked about the possibility of leaving the Huskers a year early to turn professional. Lue led Nebraska last season averaging 23.1 points per game.

Lue has scheduled a news conference for 1 p.m. CST at the Bob Devaney Sports Center. Nebraska coach Danny Nee also is scheduled to be there.

Grounds crew, manager make debut as minor-league umpires

Two members of the grounds crew and a minor league assistant general manager made their professional umpiring debut as Toronto beat Syracuse, its Triple-A farm team, 6-3 Monday at Dunedin, Fla.

When the scheduled umpires didn't arrive, Blue Jays officials found suitable substitutes. Steve Richie worked the plate, Ed Vonnies worked first and Don Birge took third.

When Juan Samuel homered in the second inning, he got a high-five from Richie. "Why not?" the groundskeeper said. "He hit it good."

Vonnies, the assistant GM for the Class A Dunedin Blue Jays, had some tough calls on the bases. One was a pickoff at first of Toronto's strength and conditioning coach, Brian McNamee.

McNamee had come out to treat Shannon Stewart, who had been hit by a pitch in the first inning. McNamee switched jerseys with Mike Stanley and pinch ran for Stewart, and was picked off by Syracuse starter Luis Andujar.

The umpires even had their own rooting section. Stadium announcer Ed Groth let the fans know over the public-address system when they made a good call.

With one out in the top of the third, the umpires arrived from the Blue Jays' minor league complex. Groth announced to the 339 fans in attendance, "Let's give a nice round of applause to the substitute umpires, fans. The replacement umpires have just arrived."

The replacements were booed and Richie, Vonnies and Birge were cheered.

According to Blue Jays officials, the originally scheduled umpires never arrived.

St. Louis defensive coordinator retires after 24 years as coach

ST. LOUIS — The St. Louis Rams' coaching staff has lost one of its biggest names with the retirement of defensive coordinator Bud Carson.

Carson, who'll be 67 next month, quit on Monday because asthma was slowing him down too much.

Lured out of retirement by head coach Dick Vermeil a year ago, Carson has been an NFL coach for 24 years. He put together the "Steel Curtain" defense for the Pittsburgh Super Bowl champions in the mid-1970s.

"It's not a big health thing, but you have to go full speed to get things done in a competitive environment like the NFL," Carson said. "I still would like to do it. I wish it was 10 years earlier, but it's not."

Under Carson, the Rams improved in 25 of 28 defensive categories. He was so good at his job Vermeil replaced him with two men, naming Peter Giunta and John Bunting co-defensive coordinators.

Giunta was secondary coach last year and Bunting, a 11-year NFL veteran who played for Vermeil in Philadelphia, coached linebackers last year. Giunta also was named assistant head coach.

The two filled in last season when Carson missed one game when he had gall bladder surgery and will utilize Carson's system.

"These guys will do fine," Carson said. "They know the players and they did most of the coaching last year. I missed that week and they didn't miss a beat."

All-University final to pit Greek champion against K-State's gridiron finest

Football players to play for title

SARA MARTIN
Kansas State Collegian

With ease that only Wildcat football players could pull off, the intramural basketball team Twos and Sevens, composed solely of varsity football players, took a 51-39 All-University Intramural semifinal win from Goodnow 3. Twos and Sevens will meet Lambda Chi Alpha in the championship game at 9 tonight at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Although the first points of the game were made by Goodnow 3, the omen wasn't good enough to bring them the win.

"We were really here to just have fun," Goodnow player Brian Keller said. "I wish that we'd hit a few more of our shots, though."

Twos and Sevens came out for a fun game as well but started off a little slow.

"We came in kind of sluggish," Everett Burnett said. "We didn't have all our players, so we had to get in the groove. We finally felt that chemistry from before spring break, and things really started going."

Down by 16 with two minutes to go, Goodnow 3 tried to prevent a blowout, but wasted precious time with a foul.

Unlike Division I basketball, the clock doesn't stop for free throws in intramural hoops. As time quickly ran out, Twos and Sevens took their time shooting from the line, making a slow attempt at the shot and failing.

However, Twos and Sevens players eased defensively — team members enjoyed the victory and laid on the floor laughing as time ran out — and Goodnow managed to score four more points by the end of the game.

"We really started slacking off because we knew we had the game," Burnett said. "We're trying to come out and have some fun, and we did."

Lambda Chi full-court press does in Backdoor Boys in semifinal

SARA MARTIN
Kansas State Collegian

Lambda Chi Alpha took a 55-45 win over the Backdoor Boys in the All-University Intramural Basketball semifinals.

With a constant lead of at least four points, the Backdoor Boys looked sure to win, but the team fell apart with two minutes left, giving Lambda Chi Alpha the chance to tie the game at 40.

"The press finally got to us," Backdoor Boy Spencer Levin said. "We had a lot of turnovers. We got in bad positions. We should have played better."

Instead, Lambda Chi took the lead, with a little more than two minutes left, when the Backdoor Boys were called for an intentional foul for charging at defenders instead of attempting a shot.

Lambda Chi sank both free throws, taking a 46-

40 lead with 1:04 to go.

The Backdoor Boys began fouling, but Lambda Chi sealed the victory down the stretch with strong shooting from the free-throw line.

"We're not a bad free-throw shooting team," Lambda Chi's Ryan Symes said.

"At the end, we were really just putting away those free throws."

With nine seconds left in the game, Lambda Chi took the final possession and ran out the clock.

"We just concentrated on getting ourselves back again in those last two minutes, getting steals, making layups," Symes said. "It made the difference."

Lambda Chi will take on Twos and Sevens for the All-University Intramural Basketball Championship at 9 tonight at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

KENTUCKY COMEBACK HALTS CINDERELLA UTES

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN ANTONIO — Call them the Comeback Cats.

Kentucky capped a truly maddening March with an unprecedented second-half rally, beating Utah 78-69 Monday night to win its second NCAA Championship in three years. The Wildcats did it this time with a new coach and without stars in their lineup.

Kentucky overcame the largest halftime deficit — 10 points — in a championship game with its third-straight rally of the tournament to win its seventh national title.

"We're comeback kids," Kentucky coach Tubby Smith said. "These kids have done it all."

It was the third-straight year the Wildcats were in the championship game — they lost to Arizona in overtime last season — and the third-straight year they ended Utah's season in the NCAA Tournament.

Just as they had in the South Regional final against Duke and again in the national semifinals against Stanford, the Wildcats fell behind in the first half, trailing 41-31 at half-time. The deficit was as many as 12 points in the opening minutes of the second half before Kentucky started shooting well, something Utah's past two opponents couldn't do.

"We've come back all year long," Wildcats' guard Cameron Mills said. "Every time we fell behind, we never quit."

New coach, new players don't stop Kentucky's success

Five years ago, Utah made it to the round of 32 and lost to Kentucky. Two years ago, Utah made it to the Sweet 16 and lost to Kentucky. Last year, Utah made it to the Elite Eight and once again, lost to Kentucky.

So who wins Monday night?

Kentucky again, of course.

If you know Kentucky basketball, you already know this. Kentucky harbors the winningest college basketball program in the nation. It is the Wildcats' will. It is their statewide duty. It is a season-long dream that for several years has ended with Kentucky playing for the national championship.

Just as they had done against Duke, against Stanford, and against numerous other victims this season, the Wildcats stared half-time deficits in the face and laughed. Thirteen times this season Kentucky found itself down at the break. Eleven times it won. This time Kentucky converted a 10-point halftime deficit into a seventh national title.

Kentucky concluded its third-straight championship appearance with finesse, brilliance, and ended a storied season with class.

But perhaps Kentucky's 11th appearance in the national championship game was more special, more special because Coach Tubby Smith ended his first season at Kentucky by standing upon a crowded stage at the Alamodome after the game, surrounded by his players, and accepted the championship trophy. More special because Kentucky won without a marquee player, with Antoine Walker, Ron Mercer, Tony Delk and Derek Anderson gone to the NBA.

"It was an opportunity to come together as a team," Kentucky guard Jeff Sheppard said. "It's awesome."

No, Jeff, it's magic.

Monday night typified March Madness and showed why these past three wild weeks will live for a long time as the most riveting in college basketball history.

Too many stories to tell. Too many Cinderellas to count. Too many glass slippers that didn't quite fit.

Until Monday, third-seeded Utah, unfairly portrayed as a great underdog, slid through each nail-biter a victor and took its turn laughing while Arizona and North Carolina left the dance early.

Utah center Michael Doleac spotted the looks earlier in the tournament, the laughing eyes, the smirks, the smiles that crept across his opponents' faces as he warmed up practicing jumpshots.

Monday night, down 41-31 at halftime, the Wildcats weren't smiling until they discovered the second-half spark that made them the best.

Monday night, Doleac drained three-pointers, hit bank-shots, jumpshots, lay-ins, dunks and free throws on his way to 15 points in an inspired exhibition.

With 8:23 left in the game, when Kentucky missed three three-point opportunities to knot it at 58, Doleac's fatigued legs lagged down court on the next possession, his hands on his hips.

Five seconds later, Doleac watched Cameron Mills, a senior native of Lexington, Ky., who has a story of his own too long to tell, nail a three-pointer to tie the score. He watched Sheppard steal the ball on Utah's next possession and electrify 47,000 fans with a dunk and a 60-58 lead.

Surely, this isn't happening, he thought. But his legs wouldn't move. Utah couldn't shoot, and missed 15 of its final 18 attempts.

And a national audience, five tired Utes, a fiery Kentucky team and a grateful coach named Tubby witnessed Mills and Heshimu Evans knocking down perimeter shots.

When Utah nipped at Kentucky's heels, Doleac couldn't make a three-pointer. Instead, he watched Scott Padgett sink two free throws with 33.4 seconds remaining, which put the game out of reach.

As the game ended, Mills took a couple steps and fell to the floor, sobbing uncontrollably. Padgett, who said the happiest day of his life was when Rick Pitino offered him a scholarship three years ago, hugged Smith, his new mentor, for now, his best friend.

"I thank God for this opportunity, my parents, who raised 17 kids, my family, my sisters and brothers, and these great players," Smith shouted into TV cameras. "It's a dream come true for all of us."

Smith has a new family — 13 players, and a state of revived Kentucky fans. Undoubtedly, he will return to Lexington sometime today and along some highway or country road he will spot it: CONGRATULATIONS, TUBBY. WE CAN'T WAIT 'TIL NEXT YEAR!

He will chuckle. The newest Kentucky coach also has adopted a vicious winning tradition.

K-State track teams start outdoor season

JOEL WHITE
Kansas State Collegian

K-State thrower Renetta Seiler started her 1998 outdoor track campaign just as she ended her indoor campaign — breaking records.

In Saturday's University of Texas-El Paso Springtime Invitational, Seiler threw the hammer 207-6.

That toss earned her the gold medal, a Kidd Fieldhouse record, a K-State record and an automatic berth into the NCAA Championships.

"She had a good meet for her first meet of the season," K-State coach Cliff Rovelto said. "She had thrown in practice over 200 feet, so it was a good throw, but it didn't come as a surprise."

Two weeks before the UTEP Springtime Invitational, Seiler took the silver medal at the NCAA Indoor Championships in the 20-pound weight throw with a toss of 69-2 1/2, a K-State record.

Seiler considered redshirting the outdoor season after tearing cartilage in her left wrist at the indoor meet in January. Rovelto said her wrist is healthy now, and the redshirt is out of consideration.

"She just didn't lose as much strength as we thought she might," Rovelto said.

Seiler's first-place finish in the hammer throw, second place in shot put at 46-11 — another personal best — and third place in discus at 162-6 helped the Wildcat women to a second-place finish in the meet behind Colorado State.

Freshman Carmen Wright captured the gold medal in the 400-meter hurdles with a time of 1:03.70.

"It was the first time she had ever run that event, and it was very good," Rovelto said.

Wright took second place in the long jump with a leap of 18-4 3/4 and was on the 1,600-meter relay team that took second place with a time of 3:48.79.

Anna Whitam earned the gold medal in javelin with a throw of 147-5 and had a NCAA provisional qualifying mark of 173-9 in the hammer throw.

Erin Anderson reached a personal record and a NCAA provisional qualifying mark of 11-5 1/4 in the pole vault in her gold-medal-winning performance.

The K-State men, led by high jumper Nathan Leeper, also took second place behind Colorado State.

Leeper negotiated 7-4 1/2, an NCAA automatic qualifying mark, on his way to a gold medal. He also took second place in the triple jump with a leap of 48-1.

Perry McBride won the long jump with a leap of 23-3 1/4, and Keith Black won the 400-meter dash with a time of 47.28 seconds.

The men's 1,600-meter relay team won with a time of 3:16.36.

SLEEPLESS IN MANHATTAN

Students lose sleep everyday, some drugs not good alternative

Sleep is one of the most basic of our everyday functions; it is also quite possibly the most troublesome. Normal sleep takes up a large amount of time in a fast-paced world. CNN reports more than 40 million Americans get less sleep than they need.

At no place is this a more relevant topic than on college campuses, said Art Rathbun, counselor at University Counseling Services.

"Some students have enormous loads to carry," Rathbun said. "Single parents, fifth-year seniors, grad students — all have many things to do, and their schedules get squeezed."

Students can lose sleep partying, studying or both. Many students turn to caffeine or over-the-counter drugs, and some even use drugs such as alcohol to induce sleep, which makes the problem worse, Rathbun said.

Kurt Thompson, sophomore in architecture, is one student who loses sleep because of schoolwork. Thompson estimated he got 10 hours of sleep the week before spring break, and that was only because he fell asleep while working at studio.

"Last year a lot of students were using Vivarin because of all the free samples from the thing at the Union, but not so much this year. Personally I drink a lot of Dr Pepper and eat Snickers and Nutty Bars to stay awake," Thompson said.

Some students choose medication that cannot be prescribed by doctors for insomnia, such as crystal methamphetamine. Bill Arck, director of alcohol and other drug education services at University Counseling Services, said the percentage of crystal users is small, but it is normal for a Midwest public university.

Arck said the effects of these stimulants vary depending on quantity, quality and other extenuating circumstances. He said that generally, similar people react similarly to similar drugs, but some drugs that are meant to help might be defective, even lethal.

"Some people, after they have used over-the-counter drugs to fall asleep, will feel drowsy the day after. This is what is known as rebound insomnia. The body will be dependent on the drug, and it will be harder to fall asleep," Rathbun said.

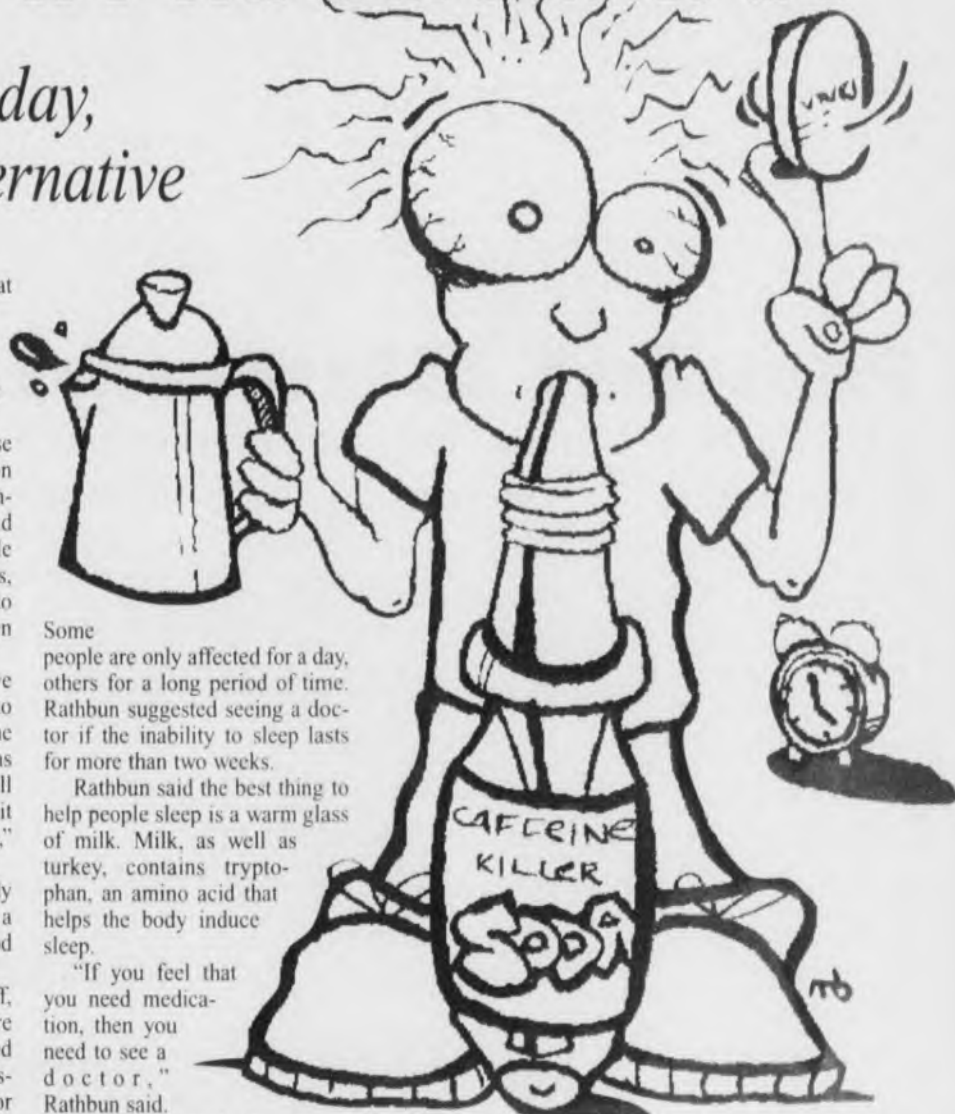

The physical side of the body is not the only part affected by a lack of sleep; it can lead to mood swings and depression.

"If the sleep pattern is off, moods are altered. Students are more susceptible to a depressed mood, feeling down. They are discouraged easier, and gloomy or sad," said John M. Robertson, psychologist at University Counseling Services.

Some artists claim to use sleep deprivation to become more creative.

Robertson said he doesn't agree and students become less creative with less sleep. He said it is more difficult to take a test or write a paper after long periods of disturbed sleep.

The problem with treatment is people have different chemical combinations, so it is impossible to predict the effects on everyone.

Some people are only affected for a day, others for a long period of time. Rathbun suggested seeing a doctor if the inability to sleep lasts for more than two weeks.

Rathbun said the best thing to help people sleep is a warm glass of milk. Milk, as well as turkey, contains tryptophan, an amino acid that helps the body induce sleep.

"If you feel that you need medication, then you need to see a doctor," Rathbun said.

Robertson said the keys are regularity and predictability. Students need to get into a regular sleep pattern. This means setting a time to go to bed and a time to wake up. This does not mean students should fit eight hours of sleep in the day somewhere.

The good news, however, is sleep patterns usually return to normal after students graduate. Once people get into a regular routine, such as a 9-to-5 job, their sleep patterns also become regular.

Little Apple Soccer Club team finishes 5th in nationals, grateful for support in season

CORBIN H. CRABLE
Kansas State Collegian

En Fuego, the Little Apple Soccer Club team, is certainly living up to its name. Indeed, it was on fire last season and plans to stay that way throughout the coming season.

The team, composed of 16 members from the Manhattan area, practices three times a week.

In addition to practices for both the indoor and outdoor seasons, En Fuego competed in the National Soccer Tournament in mid-March, where the team came in fifth place, competing against teams from as far away as Ontario, Canada.

"They did well, and they played the best they could," said Doug Desmarreau, who has coached the team for the past four years. Desmarreau also coaches soccer at Manhattan High School. He said he sees potential in his younger generation of players.

"In a year or two, when these kids get to the high school level, we'll have a pretty strong team," he said. "These kids are the future of the soccer program in Manhattan."

After its hard work at the international tournament, the team now looks to a season of outdoor soccer, facing teams from Topeka and Emporia, Kan. The team, the only team in Manhattan to play the sport indoors, recently finished its season of indoor soccer.

Joining En Fuego for its new season is Sarah Gerth, the only female on the soccer team. Gerth, 13, has remained actively involved in soccer for the past five years. She said her experience as the only girl on the team hasn't soured her views of the sport, though.

"It doesn't bother me," Gerth said. "Everyone on the team works hard, and everyone treats me like one of the guys."

Gerth said she hopes to play soccer throughout high school and college, perhaps eventually playing professionally.

Jake Hughey, 13, the son of team manager Judy Hughey, has played on En Fuego for the past three and a half years. Hughey's other two children, Becca, 9, and Josh, 8, also have been actively involved in soccer.

Jake has been playing soccer since age 7 and said he enjoys the sport because of its competitive nature.

"I like being able to compete with some of the best teams in the nation," he said. "When you get to that competitive level, you have to get out there and work hard."

Because all three of her children are involved with soccer on one team or another, Hughey said, it makes for a fun family activity.

"Soccer is a family sport for us," she said. "It's an excellent sport for our kids to be involved in."

Because his mother is En Fuego's team manager, Jake said, he receives extra motivation.

"She pushes me a little more, but that's probably because she's my mom," he said.

Hughey said she believes the soccer team gives the players a chance to develop both their teamwork skills and their skills as individual players.

"They're a great group of guys,"

Hughey said. "It's fun to see them work as a team and develop their soccer skills."

Hughey said she was grateful to the community for its support of the team and its contributions to the team's efforts to be sent to the National Soccer Tournament. The team raised a total of $6,000 in three weeks, and this money, raised mostly by contributions and fund-raisers, sent the team to the tournament.

One of the fund-raisers the team is involved in is a raffle for a sports ball autographed by several K-State athletes to purchase equipment for the teams.

Carbon monoxide can leak from old furnaces, poison thousands

LORY STONE
Kansas State Collegian

According to the American Lung Association, at least 250 people die annually from carbon monoxide, and thousands more become ill.

Jennifer Worthen, junior in family studies and human services, said she was exposed to carbon monoxide when she didn't realize that her furnace had serious potential for crisis.

"I had no idea we had a problem," she said. Worthen said the flame in her furnace was set too high, and she started smelling gas and decided to call KPL. Because of the gases, Worthen and her roommates were forced to evacuate.

Michael Shea, an employee of Powell Brothers Inc. of Manhattan, said he is concerned about the rising number of carbon monoxide incidents.

"We've noticed in the last two to three years a rise in dangerous furnaces. We used to hardly ever get one that was truly dangerous. Now we replace three to four dangerous heaters each winter," Shea said.

Shea said carbon monoxide is a dangerous, odorless, colorless gas that is produced by the incomplete combustion of fuel. He said the gas odor, such as what Worthen smelled, is not the carbon monoxide itself, but rather other gases that accompany carbon monoxide leakage that do possess an odor.

"Carbon monoxide is a danger people aren't thinking about," Shea said. "People think that their furnaces last forever. They get old, rusty and start producing carbon monoxide."

The American Lung Association said exposure to carbon monoxide can potentially be from any fuel-burning appliance that lacks adequate ventilation or maintenance.

This includes gas appliances, fireplaces, space heaters and automobile exhaust fumes to name a few.

Shea said automobile exhaust fumes are often the cause of many calls that Powell Brothers Inc. receives.

"Some people with attached garages turn on their cars in the morning, garage door down, then run back in the house. This puts a lot of gases in the house through the uninsulated wall. It is a cause for many carbon monoxide alarms to go off. Several of our calls are around 7:45 a.m.," Shea said.

But Shea said that furnace deterioration is a less obvious cause of carbon monoxide poisoning.

"We've seen a rise in the danger of carbon monoxide around Manhattan. As we've noticed from what we've been doing in our business, it seems like it's because people think their furnaces will last forever," he said.

Shea said the average life expectancy for a furnace is 20-30 years, so the potential for carbon monoxide poisoning is not necessarily limited to older homes.

Shea said he is concerned for students because, as in Worthen's case, they might be unaware of any potential for problems.

"I personally feel students are in danger. There are a lot of living conditions that aren't the best. If you are sick a lot in the winter and think the furnace is old, you should be concerned whether there is carbon monoxide in the house and tell your landlord," he said.

Shea said for students residing in basements near the furnace where carbon monoxide concentrates are particularly at risk.

Worthen said that her first move after the exposure was to inform her landlord.

"We called the landlord, and he bought us a detector. I think detectors are probably always a good idea for everyone," Worthen said.

Shea cautioned as to which detectors to buy. "Carbon monoxide detectors can be bought in hardware stores, and you should be looking for ones that cost more than $50, or else you are wasting your money.

The cheaper ones are set off by some cleaning supplies, especially those containing ammonia, and this ruins them," he said.

A spokeswoman for KPL said there were many signs, both physical and visual, to look for when worried about carbon monoxide.

Among some of the physical indications are headaches, dizziness, pinkish skin color, sleepiness and feeling sick while at home and feeling well when away.

Some visual indications include condensation on windows indicating ventilation problems, a yellow flame on appliance burners indicating incomplete combustion, dead or dying house plants and pets that are sick or dying.

Worthen said students themselves should take the initiative to have their furnaces checked out because many people might be unaware of the problem, as she was.

"It was all God that saved us that night," she said.

Researcher defends safety of smoking

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. PAUL, Minn. — The smoke of 600 cigarettes contains about the same amount of the cancer-causing chemical benzopyrene as a charcoal-broiled steak, an industry researcher testified Monday in Minnesota's tobacco trial.

Even so, tobacco companies beginning in the 1950s looked for ways to reduce or eliminate benzopyrene and other cancer-causing substances found in cigarettes, David Townsend said.

The most successful approach, he said, was reducing the overall level of tar, the sticky substance produced when tobacco is burned that contains benzopyrene and other harmful chemicals.

"Design tools have made a major reduction in tar and nicotine in the U.S. market over time," said Townsend, vice president of product development and assessment for R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.

The state and Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Minnesota are suing the tobacco industry for $1.77 billion, plus punitive damages, alleging that companies knew about the dangers of smoking, lied about them and manipulated nicotine to keep smokers hooked.

In addition to reducing tar, the companies conducted research on reducing the total smoke emissions of cigarettes, Townsend said.

One process he described involved expanding tobacco so a smaller amount would fill the same space in a cigarette.

"The process is not terribly different than popping popcorn," Townsend said. Tobacco is impregnated with a solvent that puffs up the leaf when heated, he said.

Such research was published in the scientific literature of the day, Townsend said.

Townsend was called by the defense to show that tobacco companies were extensively researching how to make cigarettes safer and were reporting their research results.

Townsend also described how cigarette manufacturers worked with the National Cancer Institute in the 1970s to develop a safer cigarette. The government pulled out of the Tobacco Working Group in 1978 and no final report was issued, he said.

As early as 1972, an article published in the Journal of the National Cancer Institute suggested raising the pH of cigarettes, which would change the form of the nicotine so smokers would still get the effects even though the actual levels of both tar and nicotine were lower, Townsend said.

The 1981 U.S. surgeon general's report on smoking and health also suggested maintaining nicotine at a level where smokers would get maximum satisfaction with minimum health risk from tar, he said.

The plaintiffs have alleged that cigarette makers manipulated nicotine levels so smokers would remain addicted, rather than as part of making a safer cigarette that would remain acceptable to smokers.

HIV infection might be considered disability, protected by federal law

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — In a major test of disability rights, Supreme Court justices sparred Monday over whether HIV-infected people should be considered disabled because of dangers involved in sex and childbearing.

The lawyer for Maine dentist Randon Bragdon argued that Bragdon did not illegally discriminate against an HIV-infected woman by refusing to treat her at his office.

The patient, Sidney Abbott, suffers no AIDS symptoms and therefore is not protected by the Americans With Disabilities Act, attorney John McCarthy said.

But Abbott's lawyer said lower courts correctly found that Bragdon violated the law, which bars discrimination against the disabled in jobs, housing and public accommodations.

The law — responsible for such aids as wheelchair ramps at countless public places — says people are disabled if they have a physical or mental impairment that "substantially limits one or more major life activities."

HIV-infected people should always be considered disabled because the contagious and fatal nature of AIDS severely limits their ability to have sex and bear children, Abbott's attorney, Bennett H. Klein, said.

Some justices disputed whether HIV infection really creates such a limit.

Justices David H. Souter and Antonin Scalia suggested an HIV-infected person faces a moral choice rather than an actual physical limit on his ability to have children.

"I'm not sure that's what the statute is talking about," Souter said.

However, Justice Anthony M. Kennedy said if a person with highly infectious tuberculosis stays away from other people, "we don't just call it a moral choice."

Someone with bubonic plague would be considered disabled, said Justice Stephen G. Breyer.

Bragdon's lawyer said the disability law aims to protect people whose disabilities affect their day-to-day independent living and economic self-sufficiency, not HIV-infected people who suffer no symptoms.

The disability-rights law says disabled people can be treated differently if they pose a direct threat to the health or safety of others.

"Dr. Bragdon believes that when he provides a service in the face of the risk of death he should be allowed to take additional precautions" such as insisting on filling Abbott's cavity at a hospital, McCarthy said.

However, Breyer said that "after 15 years and hundreds of thousands of deaths" from AIDS there appeared to be no documented cases in which a dentist caught the virus from a patient.

"How can we say here that your client exercised reasonable medical judgment?" Breyer asked. McCarthy replied that there were seven possible cases of HIV transmission in dental procedures.

Klein said unless HIV-infected people have clear protections under the law, many will hide the fact that they carry the virus.

The court never has decided a case involving an HIV-related issue or the disability-bias law signed in 1990 by President Bush.

A decision is expected by July. The justices' ruling could provide clues as to whether the law covers other kinds of disabilities, such as cases of epilepsy or diabetes, that are controlled by medication.

Clinton budget adviser blasts plan to change Social Security

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Clinton's chief budget adviser came out Monday against radical changes in Social Security, barely a week before the president opens a series of town hall meetings on overhauling the retirement system.

"Moving to privatization, if what that means is a withering away of the existing Social Security system, would simply take the risk that all of us now share and place that risk directly on individuals," said Franklin Raines, director of the White House Office of Management and Budget.

"In many cases these are the very risks that Social Security was created to deal with," Raines said.

Although Clinton has not endorsed any specific plan to keep Social Security from being overwhelmed by baby boomer retirements, Raines is the second administration official to openly voice opposition to so-called privatization proposals.

Most of these, promoted by Republicans, would divert some of the payroll taxes now used for Social Security into personal retirement accounts that Americans could invest as they chose.

In February, Deputy Treasury Secretary Lawrence Summers told a Senate Budget Committee panel that he would reject any kind of radical privatization approach.

Raines, who testified Monday at a Democrats-only hearing on Capitol Hill, said he doubts a privatized system would maintain the protections Social Security now ensures by pooling everyone's resources — including adequate pensions for low-wage workers, a buffer against inflation, and survivor and disability benefits for young people who meet with misfortune before they've had a chance to save.

"I don't want to say there can be no possible role for individual accounts," Raines said, but he added, "We've got to look at the complete proposal, not just what you'd do with private accounts but also with other components of the system."

Administration officials have promised that all ideas for Social Security reform will get a fair hearing at four regional town hall meetings Clinton has called, starting April 7 in Kansas City, Mo.

The president has asked Congress to undertake reforms in 1999, and until then leave any federal budget surpluses untouched in case they're needed for Social Security.

Impatient House Republican leaders Monday introduced legislation that would create an eight-member bipartisan commission to go to work as soon as possible and finish no later than Feb. 1, 1999.

"We need to begin immediately to develop options," said the House Budget Committee chairman, Rep. John Kasich, R-Ohio, who also wants to use projected budget surpluses to start personal retirement accounts for working Americans this year.

Raines said the administration might support creating personal accounts as a supplement to Social Security to help increase national savings, but wouldn't support radical cutbacks.

"Those who would say that the system is so bankrupt that it requires abolishing it in order to save it are just wrong," Raines said, noting that predictions are for a 25-percent shortfall in Social Security money starting in 2029, not total collapse.

'Black Widow' executed Monday for killing husband, son, boyfriend

ASSOCIATED PRESS

STARKE, Fla. — Her frail-looking body barely filling the seat of the large oak electric chair, the "Black Widow" went to her death Monday in Florida's first execution of a woman since 1848.

Judy Buenoano, 54, was executed for fatally poisoning her Air Force husband with arsenic in 1971 after his return from Vietnam. She also drowned her paralyzed son, tried to blow up her fiancé and was suspected of killing a boyfriend.

Her head shaved and coated with conducting gel, Buenoano was barely walking as guards led her into the death chamber.

Asked if she had a final statement, she answered weakly, "No, sir," squeezing her eyes shut and keeping them shut, not looking at the witnesses on the other side of the glass.

Buenoano collected about $240,000 in life insurance after the deaths of her husband, son and boyfriend but maintained her innocence.

In her final days, the former cocktail waitress and nail salon owner crocheted blankets and baby clothes, said she wanted to be remembered as a good mother, and got a third of the way through "Remember Me," a murder mystery by Mary Higgins Clark.

"Seeing the face of Jesus, that's what I think about," she recently told a TV station. "I'm ready to go home."

Buenoano was convicted of drowning her 19-year-old son, Michael Goodyear, in 1980 by pushing him out of a canoe into a river. He was paralyzed from arsenic poisoning and was wearing heavy leg and arm braces. Monday would have been his 37th birthday.

Buenoano was not a suspect in the death of her husband, James Goodyear, or her son's drowning until she tried to kill her fiancé, John Gentry, and collect on a $500,000 insurance policy by blowing up his car in 1983.

She had changed her name — "bueno año" means "good year" in Spanish. After the attempt on Gentry's life, investigators made the "Goodyear-Buenoano" connection and exhumed James Goodyear's body. It contained lethal amounts of arsenic.

Graves honors K-State football team at Statehouse

GOVERNOR RECOGNIZES UNIVERSITY'S RECENT RISE TO FOOTBALL FAME.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — K-State's remarkable turnaround in football during the past decade drew accolades Tuesday at the Statehouse.

Gov. Bill Graves called the Wildcats the finest college football team playing in America today.

Rep. Kent Glasscock of Manhattan, who with Rep. Jeff Peterson introduced the team to the House, calling it one of the truly outstanding sports stories in the nation.

Sen. Lana Oleen, also of Manhattan, who presented the team to the Senate, said K-State has enlisted a legion of fans from border to border since Coach Bill Snyder brought respectability to the program.

"When the Wildcats went to Tempe (Arizona) for the Fiesta Bowl on New Year's Eve, a tempest of purple went with them," Oleen said.

K-State had the losingest Division I college football program in the nation when Snyder arrived in 1989. In the past five years, the Cats have won 48 games and made five-straight bowl appearances.

Glasscock said it took "truly yeoman's work" by Snyder to accomplish that.

Graves and the lawmakers paid tribute specifically to K-State's 1997 football team, which won 10 of 11 regular-season games, swamped Syracuse 35-18 in the Fiesta Bowl and finished seventh in the final Associated Press poll.

But they made numerous references to the Wildcats' rise to football prominence.

Snyder was accompanied by 70 players, dressed alike in blue sports jackets and tan slacks.

office, followed by a second floor rotunda ceremony at which Graves spoke.

Some 200 people attended the rotunda ceremony.

"I'm really envious of the applause you got in both chambers (of the Legislature)," Graves said to the Wildcat players. "I only hope I can some day get as much applause for my accomplishments."

Graves also said he had a confession to make — noting he lost the coin toss for the Cats in the 1997 Cotton Bowl when K-State was beaten by Brigham Young, 19-15.

"I want you all to know I take personal responsibility for the loss in the Cotton Bowl a couple of years ago," he said.

Snyder spoke for a few minutes in each house and at the rotunda ceremony, touting his players' involvement in community service work and commenting on what he said was unfortunate publicity given star quarterback Michael Bishop, who was arrested and then exonerated from involvement in a late February altercation in Aggieville.

He referred to Bishop as "a young man who was totally innocent ... who was trying to assist others, but it wasn't perceived that way."

"It's impossible to unring a bell," Snyder said.

"But I am here to try to unring that bell. He was in the position of trying to help other people and was chastised by the media. Sometimes it's difficult to get the appropriate answers out to the public."

Friends, family remember life of KSU senior

AMANDA FINGER
Kansas State Collegian

It is a time of sorrow and shock for close friends of Tim Pentico, senior in elementary education who died March 23.

Pentico was killed in an automobile accident on his way home from his girlfriend's house in Bolivar, Mo., when a tractor-trailer crushed his car from behind.

Friends have begun to reflect and share their memories of Pentico and want people to know the kind of person he was and wanted to be.

Nathan Sherwood, a K-State graduate and now a teacher in El Dorado Springs, Mo., was not only a lifelong friend of Pentico's from Concordia, Kan., but he became his roommate when Pentico began attending K-State in fall 1995.

Sherwood said Pentico was the center point of a group of six close high school friends who did everything together.

"Tim was the kind of guy who knew everyone's birthday and made sure they received a card on their birthday, even once we graduated," Sherwood said. "Some of our friends moved away after graduation, but he always had their phone numbers."

Sherwood said that after graduation, Pentico worked for Christensen Oil Company full time for two years and then attended Cloud County Community College, where he received an associate's degree in drafting technology.

Diversity forum spurs walk-out

LINDSEY FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

Several K-State students and a faculty member angrily walked out of the K-State Student Union Little Theatre last night during a panel discussion about the coverage of diversity and multicultural issues by the campus news media.

Paul Parsons, professor of journalism at K-State and mediator of the discussion sponsored by the Society of Professional Journalists, said that in 1992, KSDB-FM 91.9 turned down a proposal from Indian students for one hour of Indian music a day. He said the music didn't fit the format of the station, sparking the walk-out by some audience members.

Behind the theater doors, the group talked amongst themselves and expressed their personal views about the touchy subject. Together, the group returned to the discussion in the Little Theatre to voice its opinions and find answers to the diversity problem.

Five volunteer panelists from KKSU-AM 580, DB92, the Collegian and the Royal Purple answered audience questions about the subject. The representatives spoke of the diversity challenges they face in campus media.

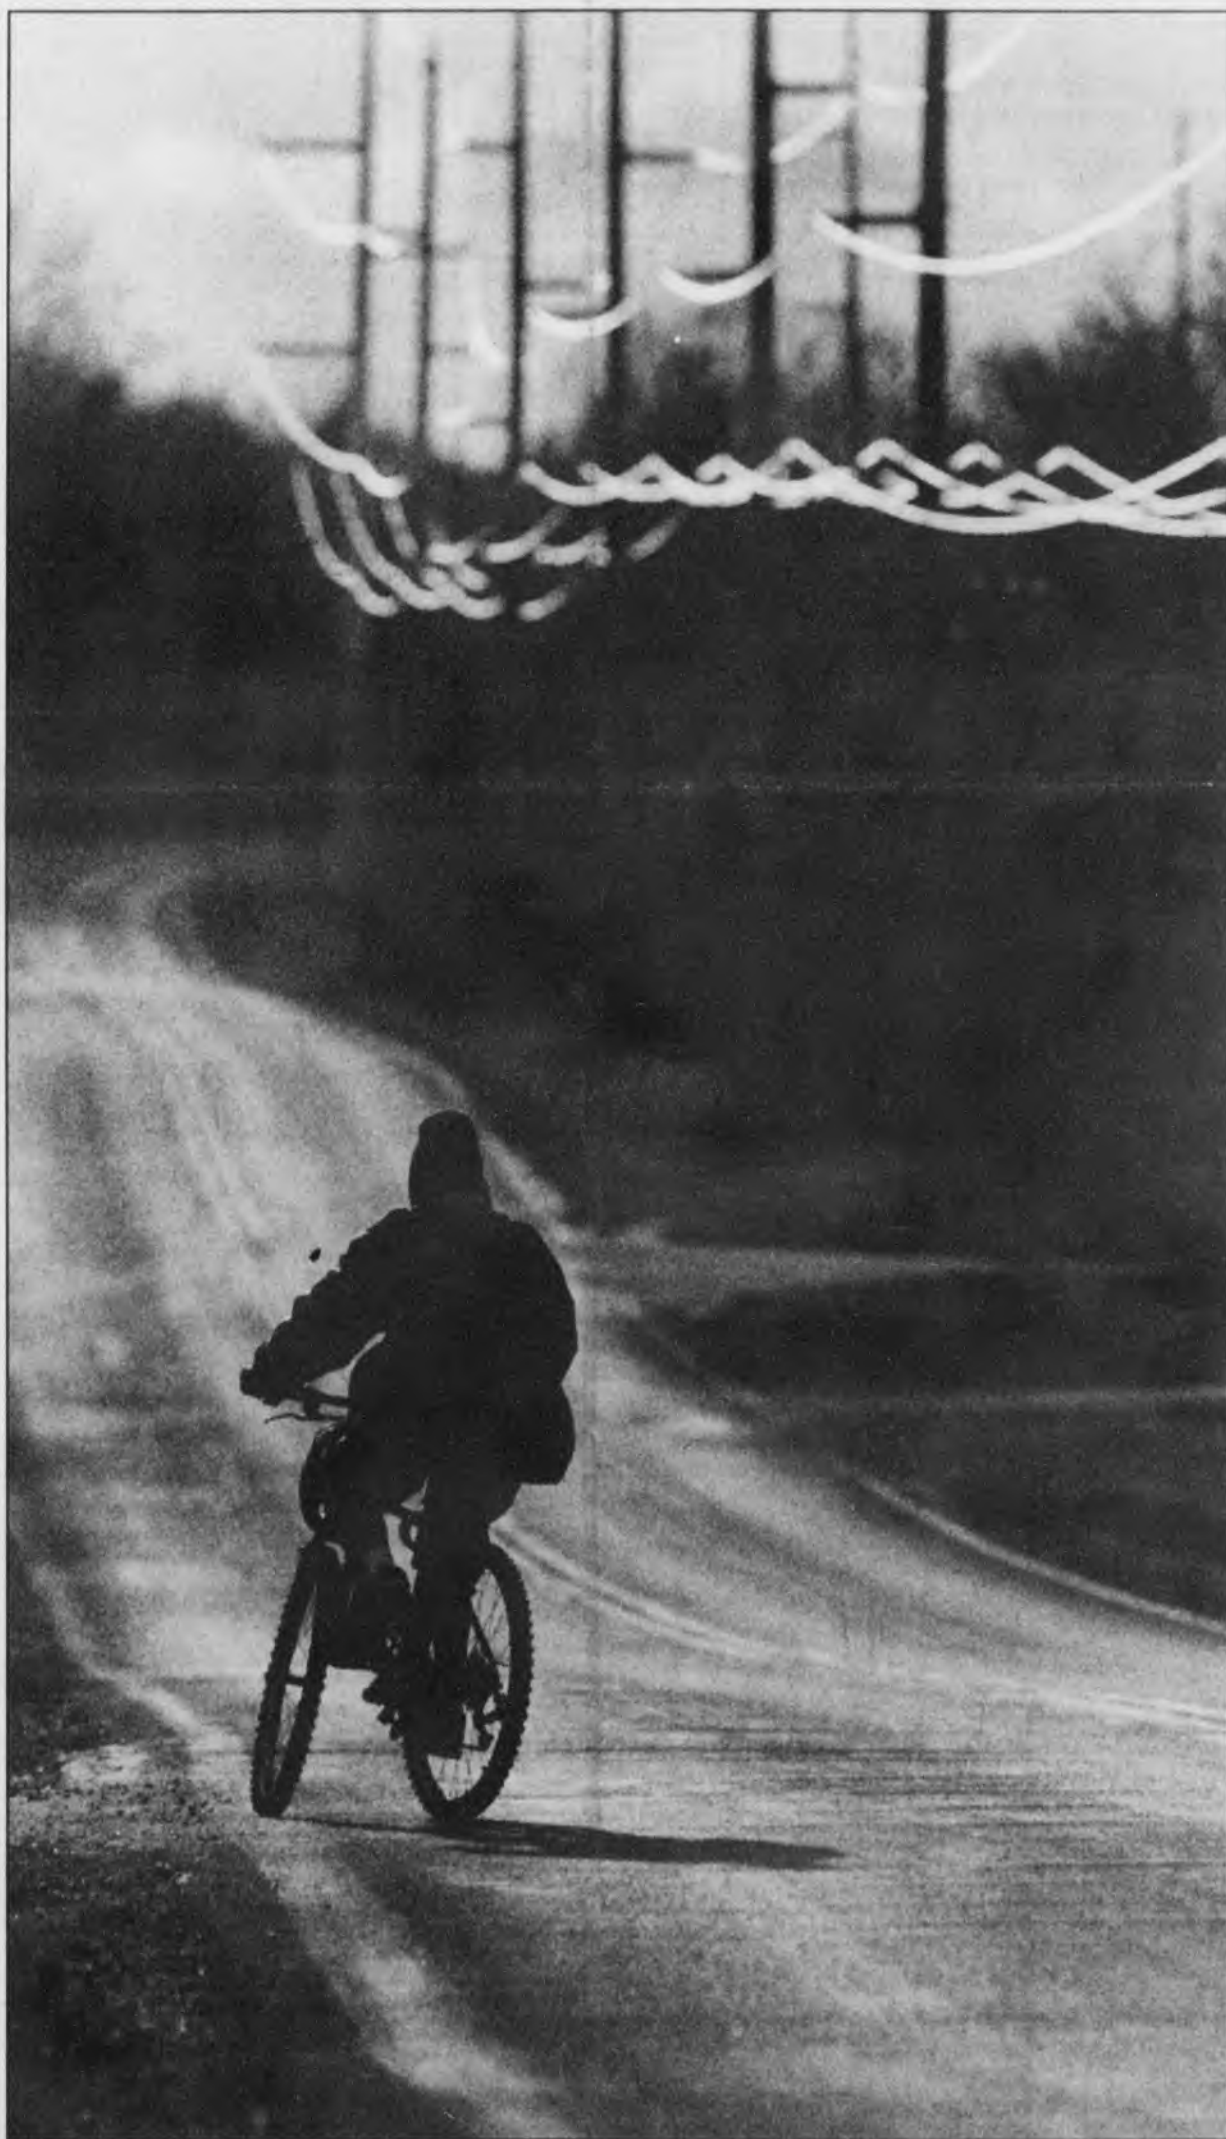

Len Potillo, general manager of DB92, said he has to make tough decisions when choosing what type of music gets on the air.

"When there is no money, you have to go with something," he said.

Potillo said it's difficult to get multicultural people to join his staff on the station. He said DB92 gives people interested in joining its staff the opportunity to feel comfortable and meet everyone.

Officials doubt implementation of House plan

KELLEE MILLER
Kansas State Collegian

Local legislators and K-State administrators are doubtful the House plan for restructuring Kansas higher education will move forward in the Senate this legislative session.

The amendment received little enthusiasm from a joint hearing between the Senate Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Education Committee on Monday, Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, said. She said right now the amendment is going nowhere.

"This is a massive change in higher education, and with four days left in this session, I don't think we should try to slam dunk the amendment," Oleen said.

President Jon Wefald said he also doesn't foresee the bill moving forward in the Senate. He said a joint committee to study the measure most likely will be established this summer.

The plan would abolish the Kansas Board of Regents and create a new Council on Higher Education. The council would govern regents schools, Washburn University and Kansas' 19 community colleges.

A portion of the plan would require an amendment to the Kansas Constitution.

"I don't think there is enough time left this session," Wefald said.

Wefald said this committee hopefully would work with Gov. Bill Graves and the Senate to create a new arrangement that would gain approval in both chambers of the Kansas Legislature.

Oleen said she agreed and said the proposed amendment probably will be moved to an interim committee that will weigh its merit. She said she supports the formation of a joint committee to study the plan further.

Dean urges change in college curricula

SHERYL WILLIAMS
Kansas State Collegian

In a presentation to engineering faculty, Terry King, dean of the College of Engineering, challenged it to revise its curricula to prepare K-State graduates for the demands of the industry.

Since becoming dean last July, King has written "Designing Engineering for the 21st Century," a plan for updating and enhancing the College of Engineering.

"Our goal is to articulate the role of engineering education in the early part of the next century and establish what we call design specifications that will enable the K-State College of Engineering to be a leader in shaping the future of engineering education," King said.

King said students are receiving a significant portion of their practical training after they graduate and become industry employees.

"Industry is no longer willing to take on the role of an engineering finishing school," he said.

According to King's plan, industry and the college should be partners in practical education.

King said he thought there will be more interaction between the college and industry and other groups that hire K-State graduates.

"We're asking our friends in industry to really step up the internship and co-op programs. We're asking them to spend more time on our campus helping out with senior design courses. We certainly are looking at beefing up our advisory councils, people — most from industry — who come in and advise the departments on the curricula and other programs," he said.

Dies trial for charges of open container, obstruction of legal process set for May 7

Manny Dies will go to trial next month on charges of transporting an open container of alcohol and obstructing legal process.

The K-State power forward is scheduled to appear at 9 a.m. May 7 in Riley County District Court for allegedly driving through Aggieville with an open can of beer on the morning of Feb. 22.

Riley County District Attorney Bill Kennedy said Dies appeared in court last week when his lawyer filed a motion to clarify the charges, after which the trial date was set.

Dies originally was arrested for possession of marijuana and drug paraphernalia, but was never charged. Antonio Rodriguez, Dies' passenger, pleaded guilty to possession of marijuana Feb. 27, with an agreement that he would not be charged with transporting an open container of alcohol. He was fined $500.

Dies was suspended from three basketball games after his arrest.

Apartment Fair to offer students help finding new homes for fall semester

Many factors such as location, roommates and cost have to come together before a college apartment can be "home sweet home."

The Apartment Fair, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Thursday in Union Courtyard, is designed to inform students about these decisions before they choose an apartment to live in.

"We want to educate students before they sign the lease," said Joyce Cantrell, instructor of family studies and human service and adviser for consumer and tenant affairs.

"We have things available for students, such as roommate agreements and inventory checklists, to ensure the students that they are treated fairly and get their deposits back."

Kathy Beier, senior in family studies and human services and director of consumer and tenant affairs, said the Apartment Fair is for anyone who might be interested in renting from property managers.

"Tables will be set up with all the information, and one property-management place is going to bring a model of their complex," she said.

There will be about nine of the larger property management firms in Manhattan attending the fair.

"I know that McCullough, Woodway, Chase and the Curtin Company will be set up at the fair," Beier said.

Beier said this will be a good opportunity for students to become educated about rental properties in Manhattan. "It's also a good way to find out what choices there are in town," she said.

Beier said a company that does Web pages also will be there to help at the Apartment Fair.

"A company will be there with their computer to help the property managers set up Web pages for their properties," Beier said. "This will make it possible for students to check out different properties online."

Dianne Urban, student legal services attorney, said there also will be a seminar and panel discussion from 2 to 3 p.m. today in the K-State Student Union Big 12 Room.

"I will be talking about landlord and tenant laws that deal with what every tenant needs to know before signing a lease," she said. "I will identify pitfalls and things to avoid and things to look for, and I'll also give students ways that may help them get their deposits back, which can be a major problem."

K-State revises home page; new format provides more convenient search options

The recently updated K-State home page will benefit students looking for course and campus information for the upcoming semester.

"The home page receives 140,000 hits a day, and the reason for change is to make things easier to find," said Neil Erdwien, application support specialist for Computing and Network Services.

Not only has the interface changed, but information is more convenient to find with a new quick search feature, eight main information categories, and 32 subcategories.

These categories lead users to information more directly, Erdwien said.

Links to university services and campus activities have been arranged to make information accessible for all.

"I think that it is a much better-organized Web page," said Jeff Dougan, Student Senate Chair and Webmaster Committee member.

NATIONAL NEWS

Law might allow farmers to purchase farm commodities through local traders

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Farmers and ranchers could buy farm commodity options at the local bank or grain elevator under legislation introduced Tuesday to end a Depression-era ban on trading outside organized exchanges.

Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., the bill's author, said it would be another tool to help manage the risks of farming and ranching. It is backed by the American Farm Bureau, the National Cattlemen's Beef Association and a half-dozen significant grain groups.

But Roberts said he expects resistance from the Chicago Board of Trade and Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

The measure repeals the Commodity Futures Trading Commission's ban on off-exchange agriculture options trading. It would allow options to be traded in the same manner other options contracts are sold.

Roberts said the bill ensures strong safeguards with CFTC regulation to enforce anti-fraud and anti-manipulation provisions of the Commodity Exchange Act.

Roberts said the bill is consistent with the 1996 farm law, which he wrote as chairman of the House Agriculture Committee.

The board of trade's main argument, according to a December letter to the CFTC, is that regulatory relief should accompany any repeal of the trade options ban. CFTC has proposed pilot projects lifting the ban that Roberts said "involved more regulations and paperwork and red tape to the point they don't work."

"Lifting the trade options ban would give off-exchange products an unfair competitive advantage," CBO President and Chief Executive Officer Thomas R. Donovan wrote. "Therefore, if the ban on trade options is lifted, organized exchanges should be permitted to offer exchange-traded agricultural options in the same comparatively unregulated environment."

The CFTC did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

Supreme Court debates artistic decency, government's right to create standards

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Prompted by a naked artist dipped in chocolate, the Supreme Court considered Tuesday whether the government can set standards for decency when writing checks for the arts. Justices suggested the effort so far has been clumsy but not necessarily unconstitutional.

"I don't know what the word 'indecent' means," Justice Stephen G. Breyer said, reflecting concern about letting government make arbitrary moral decisions on vague questions. At the same time, he asked what great works of art through the ages might also be indecent.

That ambivalence was voiced among several justices during a lively argument about the government's attempt to use general standards of decency when deciding who gets public money for the arts.

A 1990 law providing for decency to be considered was struck down by lower courts.

Solicitor General Seth Waxman told the court the overturned law added innocuous criteria for the National Endowment for the Arts that did not offend freedom of speech.

That contention was disputed both inside and outside the courtroom, by the lawyer for the performance artist Karen Finley and by the artist herself.

HALE LIBRARY IS EQUIPPED WITH A SECURITY SYSTEM THAT DETECTS A SECURITY STRIP HIDDEN IN ITEMS AVAILABLE FOR CHECK-OUT. IF THE STRIP IS NOT DESENSITIZED DURING CHECK-OUT, AN ALARM WILL SOUND AS ITEMS PASS THROUGH THE GATE.

Security alarms guard Hale Library

SHELLY SLATIER
Kansas State Collegian

Buzzing security alarms in Hale Library don't necessarily mean someone is a book bandit. It could mean a number of things. Kathleen Wisneski, circulations unit head, said when the alarm goes off it usually means students forgot to check out their material properly.

"Students might look foolish for setting off the alarm, but it can be an honest mistake," Wisneski said. "It's no big deal."

Renee Gates, microforms assistant unit head, said textbooks from bookstores, interlibrary loan books and rented movies can set off the alarm. She said the library cannot desensitize security strips that are not theirs.

"There is a security strip somewhere on all library materials, and in order for it to leave the library it has to be desensitized by a machine," Gates said. "But other items with the same security strip from other places can set off our alarm."

Maki Moussavi, senior in biology, said the security system is efficient but it is annoying when the alarm disturbs the quiet environment of the library.

"There used to be a gateway in the lobby of the old library and when the alarm would go off, just the person out there would hear it," Moussavi said. "Now since the alarms are where people study, it's really irritating when they go off."

Wisneski said the security system is a basic system that many retail stores and other libraries use.

"The security strips are on everything here," she said. "We try to protect all the material so everyone has fair usage of it."

Susan Mitchell, receiving specialist for the library, said when the alarm goes off, the person is asked to return to the lobby counter.

"We ask them to open their backpacks and check it to see if they forgot to check something out," she said. "We're not supposed to take it too far like tackling them in the hallway or anything."

Karen Cole, associate dean of the library, said the security gates came with the building, require little maintenance and initially cost $60,000.

She said last year the library spent $8,000 on tattle tape, or security tape.

"The library buys tattle tape every year and a half," Cole said. "We wait and pair up with other institutions so it will be cheaper when we order it."

Hale budget covers materials stolen, lost from library

SHELLY SLATIER
Kansas State Collegian

Not all of the $2.5 million allocated in the Hale Library print budget goes toward new books and journals.

Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said when printed material is lost or stolen, the library pays for it out of the existing budget.

"We have no special fund for replacement, we use funds for new materials," he said.

He said six percent, or 60,000 of Hale's one million printed volumes, likely will disappear over a lifetime.

"The rule of thumb many libraries go by is over a lifetime six percent of all the printed material in the library will be missing," Hobrock said.

"The absence of something may not come to our attention for years."

Tim Watts, humanities bibliographer for the library, said the reason the library doesn't know what is missing right away is because inventory is not taken.

"I know things disappear, but the only way to know for sure is when a person goes to find something and it is missing," Watts said.

The last and only complete inventory taken of the library was done in 1982 when computers were installed.

Hobrock said the library has the first 300,000 volumes of books it received written down in records available in the archives department, and the rest are in the card catalog.

"The reason we don't do an inventory every year is because it would cost hundreds of thousands of dollars," he said.

"Right now 98 percent of everything we own is in a computer database, and by June it will be 100 percent."

Monographs and one-time purchases, such as books; serials and recurring purchases, such as unbound magazines and journals; and electronic databases, such as CD-ROMs and the Internet, are the three categories, into which the print budget is divided.

Hobrock said the library gets 100,000 serial issues a year, and some issues are bound to reduce theft and disappearance.

"The loss rate of periodicals is much lower than books because we can bind them together," Hobrock said.

"The binding budget is $90,000 a year."

Karen Cole, associate dean of the library, said if a book is missing, replacement is not merely as simple as a phone call.

"We attempt to replace a book by all means, but sometimes it is impossible," she said.

Hobrock said replacement is not easy and can be a lengthy process.

"Books are printed and go out very quickly. If the book was printed a long time ago, then we will have a hard time getting a copy of it," he said.

Hobrock said some annual journals cost $15,000 each, so stealing one issue could be considered grand theft.

He said some specialty books cost $500 each, and if someone were to take one, the replacement cost would be so high the library would not spend the money to replace it.

"If the book is expensive and people rarely use it, we would get the person the book from interlibrary loan," he said. "But we do try to replace everything we can."

Hobrock said library staff agonizes over the problem of missing material.

"I guess people don't understand how expensive things are," he said.

Football players do fine job representing K-State

When Gov. Bill Graves and the Kansas Legislature paid tribute to the K-State 1997 football team, they were honoring hard work and a winning attitude.

These characteristics are true not only of the football team but of K-State students in general.

Congratulations to the football team and to the fans who have contributed time, money and energy to see their team continue to build on the winning seasons under Coach Bill Snyder.

Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, was right when he said this is one of the greatest sports stories in the nation. The success and reputation of the football team and the name-recognition of K-State have grown almost miraculously under Snyder's dynamic leadership.

It's important to let students and teams know when they are doing a good job, and this year the K-State football team went a long way in making our athletic programs and university a better place.

As football stars and role models, the players' behavior on and off the field often gains much attention. We hear if one individual steps out of line, so it's important also to spotlight their overwhelmingly successful ventures.

The football players truly are representatives and ambassadors to the state and nation.

Many times, they give students and the K-State community a lot to applaud and be proud of.

Their work on the field is amazing, and not only were they seventh in the nation during the season, but The Sporting News has placed the team in the Top 10 in its pre-season polls.

The Kansas legislators, many of them K-State graduates, expressed the appreciation of the state and acknowledged the recognition this successful team has brought to the university. This also was a nice opportunity for Kansas leaders to bridge the gap and spend some time with the young men of the K-State football team.

WHEN THE WALLS COME CRUMBLIN' DOWN

The failure of Anderson Hall can only be solved one way — in its demolition

When Baron Georges Haussmann needed to inflict some order on the rambling medieval streets of 19th-century Paris, he started ripping down old buildings and constructing grand boulevards through the City of Lights.

Eventually, the town overcame its sentimental old self, and transformed into a pleasant city of arranged views and logical traffic systems.

In much the same manner, K-State needs to consider selective destruction and construction to establish a more logical campus. Our fledgling system of enclosed quads needs to be reinforced with inter-campus connections. With that in mind, the plans for the $1 million K-State Student Union Plaza between the Union and Seaton Hall could change for the better.

Or, more to the point, this campus needs to seriously consider tearing down old Anderson Hall.

I'm sometimes a sentimental fool myself, and can see that Anderson's picturesque architecture with its arched windows, bell tower and vine-covered limestone walls is appealing. But it speaks more for the 1863 version of campus than it does for the year 2000 campus we want to become.

Anderson's trendy architecture doesn't speak to our generation anymore, and that is grounds for its removal. Who's going to miss Anderson anyway? No one graduates from Anderson Hall.

Aside from the purely architectural argument for Anderson's elimination from campus, there is the matter of the bats and the spirits. It's no secret there is a bat problem in the upper stories and skunks have been known to call Vice President Bob Krause's office home now and then.

What about the ghosts of administrations past? That supernatural energy, pent up for so many decades, became so enormous back in 1993 that the president's office spontaneously combusted. Luckily, the president was not there at the time.

Earlier, the Union Plaza was mentioned. Consider that if Anderson were leveled, the view from the plaza would be opened up across the great lawn and to the trees on the east side of campus. One might even be able to see the distant hills of the Kansas prairie while strolling to the Union.

The old site of Anderson could be turned into a large public square with fountains, popcorn stands and benches. On the weekends, bands could play and jugglers could entertain the potential crowds of students who would flock to this new public space.

If the Kansas Board of Regents decides to flatten Anderson, the next step would be finding a new home for the administration. Because the administration is a nonessential university service (meaning, it's not strictly central to the academic necessities of research and education), it easily could be removed to Edwards Hall or the K-State Foundation building. Or the administration could move into Lafene Health Center's building if it should move to Mercy Health Center.

Perhaps that is being somewhat unreasonable. The administration might be too comfortable in its current location to want to move off campus or much farther from the Union. Which is why my second suggestion for the redevelopment of the Anderson site would include a building.

But not just any building, a millennial tower designed by famed British millennial architect Norman Foster. Foster is pushing forward a grand Millennium Dome for Greenwich, England. That dome would act as a sort of Crystal Palace of the 21st century and include technological and cultural exhibitions on the greatness of the United Kingdom.

K-State's version would be a tower on 200 foot stilts, so as to preserve the new view created with Anderson's demolition. Rising at least 70 stories, the all-glass-clad tower could include restaurants, an observation deck, the entire administration, assorted campus offices and even a new residence hall. Some floors could be leased out to private businesses, and the entire project could be financed by the revenues.

The views alone to the surrounding countryside would be astounding.

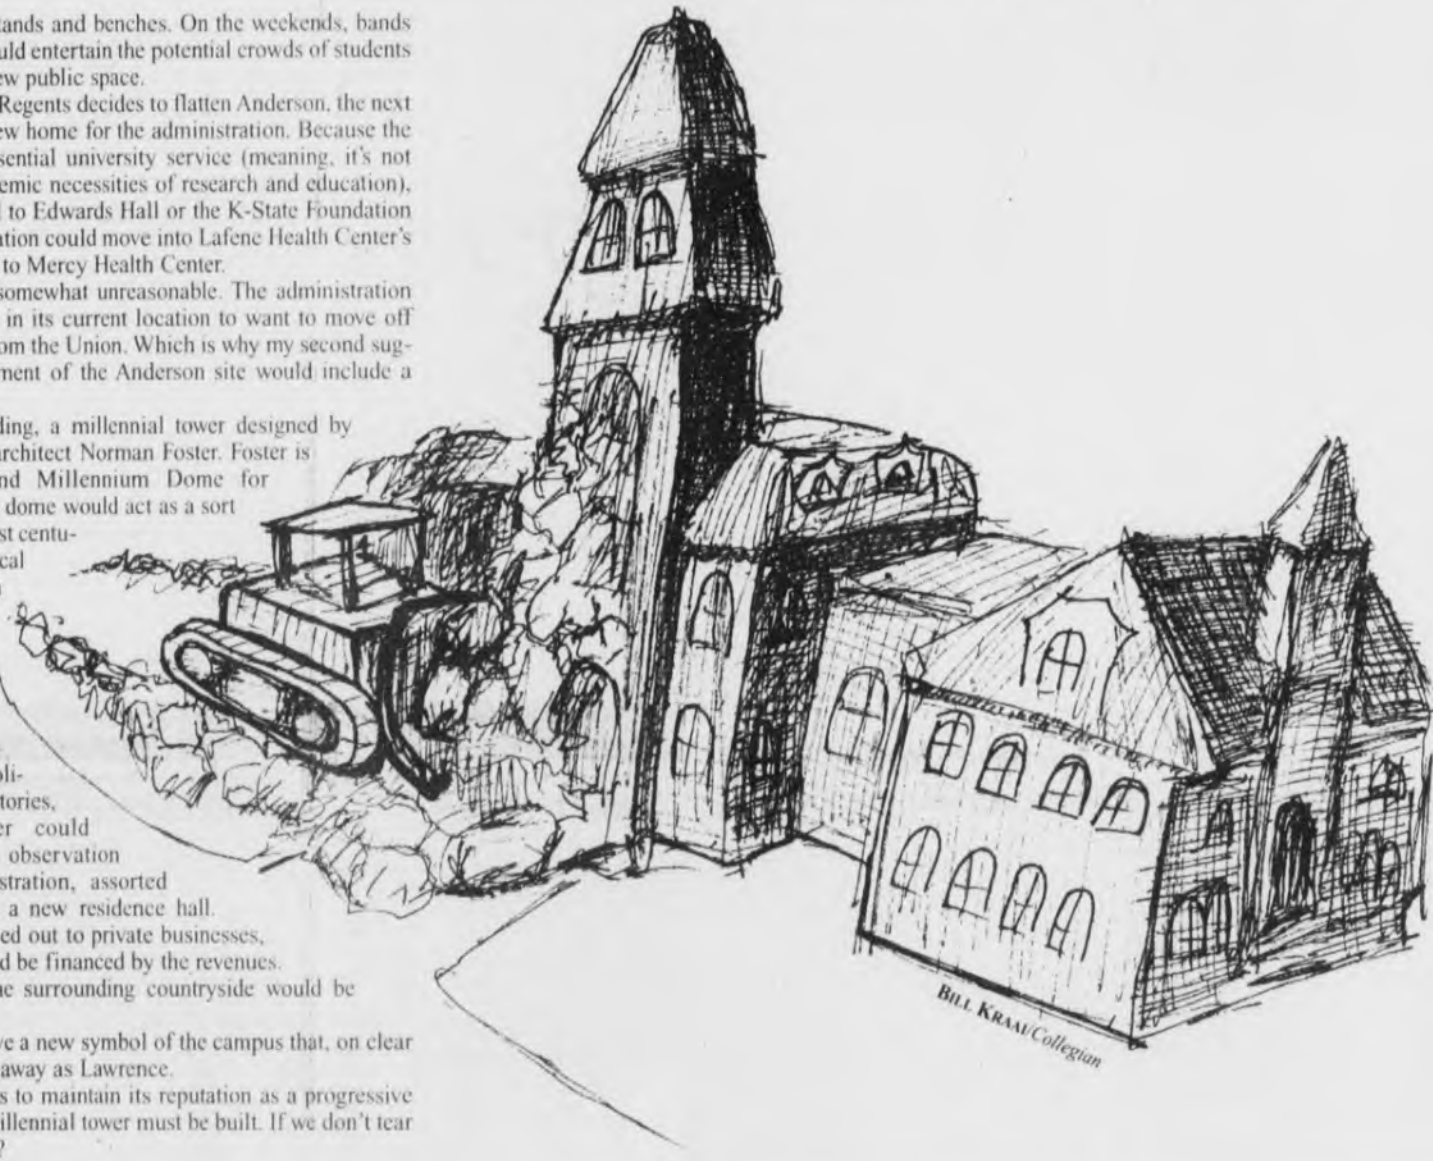

And K-State would have a new symbol of the campus that, on clear days, could be seen as far away as Lawrence.

If K-State truly expects to maintain its reputation as a progressive university, the proposed millennial tower must be built. If we don't tear down Anderson, who will?

Adventures of rock-star lifestyle outweigh security of steady career

It's the American dream that has been pounded into my head from day one. Perhaps most of you are familiar with it. It's the one that goes something like — finish high school, get accepted to a college, graduate from college, snag a job, meet your spouse, raise a family and live happily ever after. Sounds perfect doesn't it? That's because in theory it is. However, when this sequence of events is applied to everyone, its flaws are revealed.

Right now I'm at the "finish college and find a job" level in the American dream sequence. From outside, it would appear that I'm on top of my game and am screaming toward happiness. I'm getting decent grades and am having good luck finding interviews for jobs. I'm beefing up my résumé and making connections that could further my success. In fact, with the major I have and the progress I'm making, I'd say I'm right on target. So what's the problem? I'd throw it all away in a second for the chance to do what I really want to.

You see, I'm a dreamer. Someone whose feet have never been tightly fixed to the ground I tread upon. So what's my big dream? Music. Yep, I'm diseased with the prospect of becoming what every kid at one point wants to become, a rock star.

The problem is that my dream has become more and more of a reality in the past year. At this point in the semester last year, my buddy and I were sitting down with his guitar, fooling around with rhythms, lyrics and harmonies and thinking up funny band names we could call ourselves when we make it big. Delusions of grandeur, we thought. Now we've been to a recording studio in Los Angeles twice in the past eight months, have somehow compiled an EP of five songs, acquired two new band members and set up our first live gig this April. What the hell happened?

This whole thing wasn't supposed to work this smoothly.

A year ago I was a happy dream that bounced around in my head while I pursued my goal of becoming a television news anchor. Now, it's a burning possibility that demands my attention and determination. The only problem is I now have two well-established paths ready for me to follow. One path gives me guaranteed money, the chance to move up, security and the ability to start a family. The other path guarantees me nothing. You'd think I'd take the first one, right?

Hell, no! I thought I'd be happy becoming a responsible career man with a two-car garage, 1.5 children and a dog in the back yard. I'd be even happier living out of a bus, eating fast food, partying till dawn and spreading our music to any fool who would want to listen. To me, that's the good life. I know my partners in crime feel the same way.

Now I'm not ignorant enough to think I'm the only person in this type of situation. In fact, there isn't a day that goes by when my best friend and roommate and I don't toy with the option of dropping out and taking the big shot. His dream is acting, and his roadblock is the same as mine — wasting precious time in a place that won't make the dream a reality.

So what's a person to do? Well, for crying out loud, if I knew, I wouldn't be writing this column. It's because of my indecision that I'll probably end up spending another year in "Manhappiness," going through the motions. That really scares me. If everything got this good in a year's time, what is to say it won't button-hook on me and get that much worse in another year?

Well, I guess it comes down to the age old question. Will I do what's right for my parents, future family and pocket book, or will I do what I know is right for me? Now that's a tough question. After all, if it weren't for my parents and the prospect of chasing the American dream, I never would have met my band mates and the dream never would have sparked.

So in other words, I owe it to them. I owe it to myself to prove to them that all of this hasn't been in vain. I truly believe that. When I think of all the money they've spent on me and all the support they've given, I think I'd be the anti-Christ if I walked away from it all. I've also never been one to quit something that's so close to being completed. But does all that counteract the fact that all I really want to do with this life is play music? Perhaps at least for now it does.

My parents were always the ones who told me if I found something I was good at that I truly enjoyed, I'd be the happiest person alive. I couldn't agree more. Well, I've found that thing, but it never would have happened without them. So here's to my parents. Here's to lifelong happiness. Here's to the indecision that plagues all people like me. Here's to another year in the Little Apple. Here's to the dream that turned my world upside down.

Here's to life.

Beauty pageant piece contains stereotypes

Editor,

I am writing to address Brandi Hertig's column published in Friday's Collegian. I believe that she has written an article that is the epitome of negativity. I do not believe she is able to realize that the attitude toward women is turning around from the days of old. Secondly, I don't believe that she completely understands "beauty" pageants.

First, Hertig writes 10 paragraphs of introduction. In this introduction she writes little about the subject that the title emphasizes. She writes about every harassment case she has encountered since grade school. True, sexual harassment is alive and well in our society, and it is a sad epidemic. I am a man who is trying my best to curb this type of behavior, but I don't think 10 paragraphs about personal attacks help the article in any way.

Second, she doesn't even address the myth that beauty pageants spark harassment. Hertig simply states, "our brains aren't in our tits or asses." To this I must agree. A woman should not be judged on how big her breasts are or on how round her backside is.

In pageants, the contestants are judged on their fitness and health. This is to ensure the contestant is fit to take on a full year of travel and appearances. The swimsuit competition is also the lowest percentage of the total points. The emphasis is placed on the talent and interview portions of the contest.

I've been working with beauty pageants for seven years, and not once have I heard an inappropriate remark about the swimsuit portion of the show. Everyone participating and attending knows the swimsuit portion is not a demeaning or degrading event. I believe it is only those who lack knowledge or understanding about pageants that place the "harassment" on the swimsuit portion of the pageant system.

Third, I find the column to be poorly written. It is a hard column to follow. It jumps from personal experiences to three uninformed paragraphs about pageants to friends harassing friends. I am disappointed that an English major would write an column of this caliber. Please, next time take a few minutes to formulate a valid argument before putting it on paper.

Beauty pageants are not a perverse event meant only for wide-eyed men. The pageant is an event that puts women on a pedestal and allows them a moment to shine. It allows them a chance to speak their minds and to make a difference in our society. These women go on to make huge contributions in our communities, states, nation and world. Please, don't degrade this wonderful event to an ugly act of harassment.

It is an event where women can find their voices and use them to affect the world.

City Commission OKs crosswalk safety plan

Editor,

I am writing in response to the column titled "Campus crosswalks present life-threatening dilemma" appearing on the Opinion Page of the March 19 edition of the Collegian.

Last month, the City Commission approved K-State's request to use resources from the City/University Fund in 1999 to improve pedestrian safety on campus streets and on perimeter streets. This funding will be spent on two separate projects.

The first project involves making lighting improvements at 10 different pedestrian crosswalks. These improvements will be at three locations on Denison Avenue (west of the Natatorium, southeast of Goodnow Hall and east of Goodnow Hall), two locations on Claflin Road (south of Throckmorton Hall and south of Umberger Hall), two locations on Mid Campus Drive (between Holton Hall and Blumont Hall and at the intersection with Petticoat Lane), one on Lover's Lane south of Justin Hall, one at the intersection of Petticoat Lane and Campus Creek Road, and one on 17th Street between Ahearn Field House and the K-State Student Union.

When this project is completed, each of these heavily traveled pedestrian crosswalks will be equipped with better lighting on both sides of the street. This project will cost about $45,000, with $30,000 coming from the City/University Fund and the remaining $15,000 coming from the University's Maintenance and Repair allocation.

The second project involves improving pedestrian safety on North Manhattan Avenue in the three-block area between Vattier Street and Bertrand Street. We are continuing to work with city of Manhattan staff to determine the best way to make these improvements.

It now appears the project likely will include a pedestrian crossing signal and improved lighting at Thurston Street, as well as other changes in that three-block corridor, designed to improve pedestrian safety during both daylight and nighttime hours. The City Commission has approved our request to spend a total of $120,000 for these improvements during the two-year period beginning January 1, 1999.

Even though the City/University Fund will not be available for several months, the recent accident in the crosswalk on Denison Avenue, southeast of Goodnow, has highlighted the importance of improving lighting at crosswalks in that corridor.

As a result, we will use other university funds to make those improvements as quickly as possible. It is our plan to complete the lighting improvements on Denison within the next sixty days. The other improvements to be financed by the City/University Fund will be completed as quickly as possible when the funds become available next January.

Campus sidewalks need care in winter

Editor,
It has come to our attention that campus sidewalks are not getting the adequate attention they deserve, after a snowfall like the one on the weekend of March 8. After a snowfall, pathways get slick with ice, making our learning environment dangerous and precarious. We request that these problems be brought to light, and that sure action be taken. We feel that a new system of placing sand buckets near building entrances should be instated, allowing students and faculty to sand the problem areas in their environment at their discretion. Furthermore, we would like to urge school administration to cancel campus operations if such a dangerous environment develops resulting from ice formation on the pathways. Our learning environment should be safe and secure from such dangers, and we urge the administration to review its snow-removal policies and make necessary changes to allow more control over our environment. Below are signatures that agree with this cause.

Crosswalks endanger safety of pedestrians

Editor,
Recently, a student at K-State was struck by a car at the crosswalk on Denison Avenue. These dimly lit crosswalks are poorly marked and create a situation where accidents are likely to occur. This location and other crosswalks, including those along Denison, Claflin and North Manhattan avenues are especially dangerous. Regardless of lighting, pedestrians might still not be seen by drivers because of the lights of oncoming cars. Funds have been allocated in the City/University Fund to increase lighting, but this might not totally help the situation. By installing pedestrian-activated flashing walk lights, such as those used in the crosswalks near many of Manhattan's public schools, drivers would be aware of the pedestrian's presence in the street without having to actually see the pedestrian. Increased action needs to be taken to ensure the safety of pedestrians and to give drivers more peace of mind when traveling Manhattan's streets. By installing walk lights, the "invisible" pedestrian might be seen.

Lighting on Denison demands quick fix

Editor,
I am writing as a student of K-State who wanted to thank the university for responding to the lighting problem at the crosswalks along Denison Avenue. I am glad the problem finally will get the attention it deserves. However, I do feel the problem should be dealt with immediately. It seems to me that K-State does not address a problem until an accident happens. For example, on March 4 a student was struck by an automobile at the crosswalk near Denison and Platt streets. Shortly thereafter, an article appeared in the Collegian. It stated that the lighting along Denison would become the university's top priority. It said the problem would be dealt with in two months.

I was glad to hear the lighting would finally be taken care of, but two months? Think about it. At any given moment a person could die from being hit by a car. It could happen tomorrow, next week, next month, even right now as you are reading this. Will this university continue to sit back and wait for someone to die before it fixes the problem? Obviously it took a woman getting hit and spending eight days in the hospital for any action to be taken. What if she had died?

Now I realize that little thing called money gets in the way. But what are we all here for? I do not think we live to make money. We live to live and experience what life has to offer. Life is very short, and anyone could expire at any moment. Last fall I personally saw 21-year-old Mike Newcomb killed when a car hit him on his motorcycle on his way to class. I bet he did not get out of bed that morning thinking he was about to die. Is finance more important than life? I bet if this university looks hard enough, it could dig up the money right now. What if someone dies when hit by a car on Denison within the next two months? I would hate to see how this university would look then.

Groups should control own standards, rules

Editor,
I have been reading the ongoing debate in the Collegian about gays in the Boy Scouts of America and have come to the conclusion that both sides of this issue are using inflammatory language and bigotry to create a huge controversy about a simple issue. The simple issue at stake here: Can a voluntary organization set its own rules and standards for membership? There are all kinds of voluntary organizations in this country. All of these organizations have different rules, membership criteria and goals. Their membership criteria and rules reflect the path the organization takes to achieve these goals. Should the government be able to step in and tell the Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian Society, the Scouts or any organization how to govern itself? The answer is no.

People join the Boy Scouts because of what the Scouts stands for. I was in Cub Scouts and Webelos for these reasons. Instead of changing the Boy Scouts to meet the agenda of a small group of scouts, these gay scouts and leaders should form their own organization. They have the right to do so and would be able to set the rules and goals as they see fit.

Please do not do to others what you do not want done to yourself. Do not tell me to believe what you believe is right, and try to force the government to infringe upon my rights by forcing me to accept what you believe. Please look at the facts, and put aside bitterness and hatred on both sides.

I am a Christian, and I do not believe that homosexuality is God's plan or desire for people. I do not hate homosexuals. I believe they have the right to believe as they choose. God gave every person the right to free will. I will never infringe upon that right. It is not a right to be able to join the Boy Scouts; it is a privilege.

The Boy Scouts is not telling gay people to believe differently than they do. The Boy Scouts does not agree with gay people's beliefs and chooses not to admit them into membership, as is its right.

Speaker clarifies effect of abortion picketers

Editor,
I recently gave a talk on the effect of pro-life picketers on women having abortions.

I feel that the brief article that appeared in the Collegian about my talk (and especially the headline of the piece) did not accurately capture the flavor of the material I presented. The headline of the article in question states that "Anti-abortion protesters do not depress women who have abortions."

This is emphatically not the case. While it is true that simply seeing picketers is no guarantee that women will become depressed, specific picketing behaviors and women's emotional responses to picketers both have been found to increase depression.

For example, as I stated in my talk, women who are blocked from entering the clinic by picketers and women who confront intense pro-life activities as they enter an abortion clinic are more depressed immediately after an abortion than women who do not encounter these conditions.

In addition, I found that many women experience emotions like anxiety or ambivalence after encountering picketers. These emotional responses to picketers are related to increased depression, decreased satisfaction with the abortion decision, lower positive well-being and worse overall health two full years after the abortion.

Thus, encountering picketers most certainly can have negative effects on women's health, although the magnitude of these effects is likely to be a complicated function of the picketers' precise behaviors and women's own dispositions and feelings about the abortion.

Reader backs classes on blustery March 9

Editor,
I am writing in response to the March 10 editorial "KSU should have closed classes because of the snow." While I disagree with the title and overall theme of the article, I also think the rationales behind the argument were rather feeble.

First of all, I personally have experienced weather conditions far worse than they were on March 9 and have not had classes canceled as a result. I live at least two miles away from campus, I drive a casket on wheels and I had no difficulty arriving to class on time. Several arguments were raised in the article that were supposed to be supportive but clearly were insubstantial. First, although local school districts closed their schools down for the day, they had good reason to do so. For one, it is difficult to control a school bus full of some 65 children on an icy road. In addition, imagine the possible lawsuits that could follow an accident that could endanger and possibly harm the children on the bus. The school districts made the proper decision in closing the schools.

It also was noted in the editorial that Manhattan postal workers were given the day off as well.

I see two reasons why postal workers should have been given the day off on March 9. First, I don't think anyone should expect anyone else to subject themselves to the frigid conditions present on Monday for eight hours. Second, for those postal workers who drive, the likelihood of crashing their car as a result of slipping on ice is far greater when they spend eight hours on icy roads delivering mail as opposed to traveling two miles to and from campus.

Finally, it was noted that President

Jon Wefald behaved stubbornly for neglecting to cancel classes. Wefald did nothing more than provide students at K-State with what they are paying for: an education. Students never are forced to attend class on any given day; it's a matter of choice. In one of my classes on March 9, although a take-home test was due, my professor was kind enough to extend the test deadline until Tuesday because some students could not attend class.

Classes were offered on March 9 for students who were willing to attend. If you didn't want to attend class on March 9, but you would have felt guilty otherwise, try living with the consequences of your actions.

Propositions 187, 209 skew bilingualism

Editor,
I am glad to see people are aware of the injustices minorities face each day. It is unfortunate that the only time we come together is when propositions like this (Prop. 187, Prop. 209) are enacted in California, but I have to say it is better than nothing.

Many people are filled with myths that this law will only affect bilingual education, but the reality is that government services provided by law will be terminated.

This includes basic survival rights, such as bilingual emergency lines, court translators and ballot information. Diehard English-only advocates have even proposed to end Spanish radio stations, forbid private businesses to use foreign languages on billboard signs and, humorously, terminate bilingual menus at restaurants.

With our society already being plagued with social inequality, I believe we cannot afford to let such laws like this be implemented.

Brit's basketball diary

STORY BY SUN DEE MILLS • PHOTOS BY JILL JARSULIC

12:34 p.m.

JACOBSON LAUGHS WHILE TALKING TO A TEAMMATE IN THE TRAINING ROOM. JACOBSON HAD TO HURRY TO PRACTICE AFTER CATCHING A FEW MINUTES AT HOME TO REST.

12:08 p.m.

WITH A SHORT BREAK BETWEEN CLASS AND PRACTICE, JACOBSON TALKS TO HER FIANCEE'S MOTHER WHILE CATCHING SOME OF HER FAVORITE SOAP OPERA.

Watching a breast-feeding video, talking to your future mother-in-law and learning the ins and outs of map-reading are things any normal college student might do throughout the course of a day. Wildcat senior basketball guard Brit Jacobson had all these things done before noon — and her day also included therapy, practice and a game vs. then-No. 2 in the Big 12, Iowa State.

Feb. 18, 1998 — Game day vs. Iowa State

9:22 a.m., Justin Hall — Brit comes out of her first class holding a Collegian open to the sports page.

"I had to pick up a paper because it had a picture of my man in it," she says pointing to the action photo of men's basketball guard Josh Reid.

Reid and Jacobson were engaged two months ago, and she laughs at the contorted expression on Reid's face in the photo. "He's not going to like this one," she says.

Strolling to class number two, geology lab, Brit describes the video shown in her earlier class. "We watched this film about breast-feeding. I was so embarrassed. I looked around the room, and everyone else was just taking notes and seeming OK with it. It's just so far down the road for me. I don't want to think about it."

9:28 a.m., Thompson Hall — Arriving at Thompson, Brit says this lab meets on Wednesday only, and she had only been twice since the semester started. Today's the first test. "When you have to take a class that's only scheduled for Wednesdays, it's tough," she says. "Wednesdays are game days."

The Cats had not had a home game on a Wednesday since Jan. 21.

10:35 a.m. — Brit hands her test to Wendell Jolley, her teaching assistant for the class, at his request. Six other students were in the same boat, finishing hurriedly. But class was not over. Jolley hands out maps and begins a discussion about parallel lines and meridians.

11:01 a.m. — Brit turns to me, smiles and mouths, "This is really boring."

11:08 a.m. — Brit starts answering questions aloud, saving Jolley from asking endless questions that kept going unanswered, a Ferris Bueller-type moment. Jolley tells the class he won't be in next week, and the substitute won't collect the homework, but four chapters of homework will be due the following Wednesday. Brit looks less than thrilled.

11:14 a.m. — Brit and a classmate stick around after class to get some additional help with the lab. We make plans to meet at her house in an hour.

12:08 p.m., Brit's house — I arrive at Brit's house, a three-bedroom duplex she shares with her sister and her mother, Linda. Brit is on the phone with Josh's mother, Judy, while Linda tools around the kitchen. A stack of fresh biscuits and a tub of butter sit on the table, and a cookie pan of oatmeal-chocolate chip cookies are ready for the oven.

"Brit likes to eat the dough, so I don't usually bake all the cookies," Linda says.

Linda tells me the other half of the duplex practically burned to the ground last year while the Jacobsons were in Waco, Texas, watching their daughters play Baylor.

Todd (Weiner, K-State offensive lineman and sister Sunny's fiancé) saved the day. If he hadn't been house-sitting, things would have been much worse," Linda says.

Brit wraps up her phone call by handing the phone to her mom. "She calls all the time — they're great friends," Brit says of the two mothers.

12:28 p.m., Bramlage Coliseum — We enter the women's locker room to see freshman forward Brandy Harris going for treatment, and Brit goes up to the training room behind her. Sophomore center Angie Finkes is having her ankles taped for practice, and she's recounting a co-rec basketball game she saw the night before. Brit stretches out on the floor to do exercises with a rubber band.

Freshmen guards Kim Woodlee and Dee DeShay are already on tables, getting treated by the trainers. "Kim and Dee are the queens of the training room," Angie said. "You can come in here at any time of the day and one of them'll be here."

12:42 p.m. — The taping of Brit's ankles begins. Brit brags about the trainer taping them. Mary Meaux. "She's the best trainer I've ever had before," she said. "And I've gone through about three of them, but we can't let her know that."

12:58 p.m. — The team assembles in the locker room. Lots of stretching takes place while assistant head coach Kamie Ethridge jots notes on the board about Iowa State players. "She shoots the three. Beware of her outside. She turns over her left shoulder before she shoots when her back's to the basket." A lot to remember while trying to run offensive sets and control the ball.

1:07 p.m., Court — After a brief run around the court, the team meets at midcourt for a daily talk by coach Deb Patterson. Patterson has a strong faith, and she tells her team the story of David and Goliath. She parallels the bible tale to their game vs. Iowa State, a team sitting at No. 2 in the Big 12 at the time.

The theme of her talk was based on her belief that the team can win the game by drawing on wins of the past.

1:34 p.m. — The players work on trapping the ball at half court vs. an offensive set that doesn't put the ball on the floor. This is what the team will see from Iowa State tonight.

"We watched the game tape of Iowa State again, and I don't know how many times we thought we were in a position to get the rebound, and it went over our heads to them," Patterson says. "We've got to box out. If we'd boxed out then, it'd have been a different game."

1:52 p.m. — Practice moves to the other side of the ball, as the team does drills on offense, sets that attempt to work the ball inside. Patterson reminds the players to take advantage of good looks at the basket. "You have to have the mentality of a shooter," she says. "Do not pass the ball if you have an open look."

2's and 7's take intramural title

"We work out for activities like this."

football player and 2's and 7's member

MELVIN WILLIAMS OF THE INTRAMURAL BASKETBALL TEAM 2'S AND 7'S DRIVES AROUND DEFENDERS FROM LAMBDA CHI ALPHA'S TEAM TUESDAY NIGHT IN THE ALL-UNIVERSITY INTRAMURAL BASKETBALL CHAMPIONSHIP GAME. 2'S AND 7'S WON THE TITLE OF BEST INTRAMURAL BASKETBALL TEAM WITH ITS 60-51 VICTORY OVER LAMBDA CHI.

Basketball season finally ended at K-State Tuesday night. Even though the men's team was ousted in the first round of the National Invitational Tournament and the women's team failed to gain an NCAA Tournament berth, basketball still was played until the all-university intramural championship game Tuesday.

Fraternity champion Lambda Chi Alpha battled independent champion 2's & 7's, a team consisting of K-State football players, for the title of best intramural basketball team at K-State, with 2's & 7's taking the title after a 60-51 victory.

Darrell McDonald said the football players' athleticism was one of the keys to the win.

"I'm not saying they're not athletic, but we work out for activities like this," McDonald said.

The game started off fairly evenly, with the teams trading four three-pointers in the game's first five minutes. After trailing 11-9, 2's & 7's rattled off an 18-4 run to take a 12-point lead at 27-15.

Lambda Chi stormed back, however, keeping 2's & 7's scoreless for more than eight minutes late in the first half and early in the second.

Lambda Chi used a four-point possession to key its comeback. Jeff Pelton scored a basket and was fouled on the play.

He missed the free throw, but Lambda Chi grabbed the rebound and Brent Farmer hit a short field goal to begin the comeback. Lambda Chi scored the final 10 points of the half to pull within two, 27-25, at the break.

Pelton finished with 14 points to lead Lambda Chi, and Farmer added 13. Farmer said 2's & 7's athletic ability helped them win.

"You get inside, and they're so strong," Farmer said. "They're big and quick, and that's something we haven't played against all year. Guys that have been big haven't been quick."

Farmer scored the first three points of the second half on a free throw and a layup to give Lambda Chi a 28-27 lead. The teams stayed close until a putback by Brien Hanley gave 2's & 7's the lead with 10 minutes left.

With a 35-32 lead, Everett Burnett was fouled, and it was discovered that Lambda Chi had left a player off the roster, resulting in a technical foul. 2's & 7's could have taken control with four free throws and the ball, but Burnett and Melvin Williams each missed both free throws, and the team turned the ball over, blowing a chance to score six points on a possession.

Lamar Chapman made sure 2's & 7's would win the game — he took the game over from there. After Lambda Chi tied the game at 35, Chapman dished the ball like a pro to get his teammates easy looks.

Chapman, who played shooting guard in high school, ran the point for 2's & 7's. He attacked the 2-3 zone of Lambda Chi, and when it collapsed on him, he dished the ball to open teammates under the basket.

"Every time I penetrated, they all came out on me," Chapman said. "I just wanted to keep everybody happy, keep everybody involved. That's what keeps the team together."

He had five second-half assists, including three in a three-minute stretch that sealed the game. 2's & 7's didn't lead by fewer than five points the rest of the game and made the majority of its free throws when Lambda Chi resorted to a fouling strategy to try to get back into the game.

A raucous crowd was in attendance, mostly in support of Lambda Chi, but the play of 2's & 7's quieted it down. The players were egging on the crowd and talking back a little. At the end of the game, Burnett and McDonald were talking back. Burnett even did a victory lap during a late time out.

"I was just trying to get them in the game," Burnett said. "I was out here to have fun. We have chemistry on the football field, so we tried to bring it out on the basketball court."

Women set to take on No. 15 Kansas Jayhawks

SAM FELSENFELD
Kansas State Collegian

K-State's tennis team will spend April Fool's Day playing No. 15 Kansas at the L.P. Washburn Recreational Area, but the Jayhawks are anything but a joke.

The Hawks come to Manhattan fresh off a trip to California, where they beat No. 13 Pepperdine and No. 18 Southern California, and could cause problems for the No. 66 Wildcats.

"They have one of the best teams they've had in some time," K-State coach Steve Bietau said.

KU is led by three players in the top 100, No. 22 Kylie Hunt, No. 30 Christie Sim and No. 96 Christine Sues. K-State's only ranked player is No. 36 Yana Dorodnova, who will take on Hunt.

Dorodnova has struggled lately, losing two matches during the Cats' spring break matches in Las Vegas, but finished with a strong win Saturday in Colorado.

"Yana stands a chance against anybody anytime she steps on the court," Bietau said.

Dorodnova will have to play well to overtake Hunt, as will the rest of the Cats to top the highly ranked Hawks. Bietau said the team has practiced well since returning from Nevada and Colorado, although the Cats haven't spent much time playing in practice. Instead, the coaching staff has spent time giving specific instructions to individual players.

Bietau said he isn't sure if the team has improved enough yet, though.

The match is scheduled for 3 p.m. at the Rec Area, located near the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, and although Manhattan temperatures have been low lately, Bietau is confident it won't be moved indoors to Ahearn Field House.

"The forecast says sunny and 60, so I hope we can play outside," he said.

Bietau also said the Cats are counting on fans for support for their match with in-state rival KU.

"They can absolutely make a difference," Bietau said. "The players respond like any athlete would. It increases their level of competition."

Hickson granted another year

K-State running back Eric Hickson was granted a medical hardship by the NCAA and will be eligible to play for the Wildcats during the 1998 season.

After missing the entire 1996 season with a broken leg suffered prior to the season, Hickson returned in 1997 to lead the Wildcats in rushing with 7,560 yards and nine rushing touchdowns. K-State finished the season with an 11-1 record and a top-10 ranking after defeating Syracuse 35-18 in the Tostitos Fiesta Bowl.

Hickson enters the 1998 season sixth on the K-State career rushing chart with 1,635 career rushing yards. He needs 631 yards rushing to pass Mike Lawrence (2,265 yards from 1994-97) as the K-State career rushing leader.

Hickson was granted the additional year after the NCAA ruled he was unable to fulfill his collegiate eligibility because of medical hardships in the 1993 and 1996 seasons. These hardships were deemed beyond the control of Hickson or K-State, thus his eligibility was extended for the 1998 season. He is scheduled to earn his bachelor's degree in social science in May 1998.

The football team opens spring drills April 8 and will play its annual spring game May 2.

If you think baseball games are too long, try watching a cricket Test

Note to self: Next time you go to Barbados for a week, consider packing an extra outfit or two in your carry-on bag just in case the rest of your luggage is ticketed only to Miami.

When an American sports fan is 2,000 miles from the nearest fruited plain, there are two options. One, trade your rental car for an RCA satellite dish, or two, study up on the lovely sport of cricket.

It was an odd sight, to say the least. A dozen or so old English men laid around a set of sofas with their eyes glued on a broadcast of a heated cricket battle between the West Indies and England. Perhaps the only venue in the States that remotely resembles this scene would be my buddy's room, where one usually can find several Olde English bottles laying on the couch while Miami Vice reruns emanate from the TV screen.

Believe it or not, they just aren't the same thing.

A popular sport in Britain and former British colonies, cricket most resembles American baseball. While the similarities are basic, key differences in terminology and rules abound in the game. For starters, rules are called laws, and games are called Tests.

Imagine a baseball game where there is no such thing as a foul ball. Instead of four bases on a diamond, there are two sets of wickets on a pitch. Instead of a pitcher and a catcher, you see a bowler and a wicket keeper, the latter of whom is the only fielder wearing a glove. Instead of chewing sunflower seeds and tobacco in their dugouts, players drink tea in their pavilions.

Now, imagine a player at-bat, called an innings in cricket, where each player can theoretically score an infinite amount of runs. Each player hits the ball with a long, flat bat and runs from wicket to wicket, each time scoring a point. A player can also score six points for batting the ball out of bounds on the fly, and four points for batting the ball out of bounds on the hop. One player might achieve a century, which is an innings of 100 or more points, while another player might get a duck, or zero points.

One team sends 11 players to the crease (batter's box), and when the last one is dismissed (called out), the other team sends 11 players up to attempt to tie the other team's points. If they do, they win. If they don't, they lose. Simple, right?

You get the point: Cricket Tests don't exactly conform to the fast-paced American lifestyle. Whereas a long baseball game lasts four hours, the briefest cricket Test might last four days. In last week's Test between the West Indies and England, for instance, three days passed before England even went to bat because the Windies scored 500 points with its first seven batsmen.

On the fifth and final day of the Test, England was still 200 points in arrears (it was losing by 200 runs). The tension was thicker than Jerry Springer's skull during a six-hour, 18-minute innings by England's Nasser Hussain, who brought his team within 78 points of the West Indies. England, however, crashed for only 26 points on its last six wickets.

The emphatic 52-point victory by the West Indies answered the question: Who is the world's best professional athlete named Wallace? Rasheed Wallace? No. Rusty Wallace? No. Marc Wallace? Maybe. Actually, the answer is Philo Wallace, West Indies opening player (lead-off hitter). Wallace's innings of 92 set the tone for the entire Test. He teamed with Clayton Lambert to form the deadliest one-two punch in sports.

Barbados Advocate sportswriter Ezra Stuart described it best: "The pugnacious duo, whose styles exemplify the calypso spirit for which Caribbean cricketers are known, left a capacity crowd jumping and waving, with a blazing unbroken century opening stand." In other words, forget Mantle and Maris. Forget Montana and Rice. Forget LaFrentz and Pierce (that is, if you haven't already).

Lost in the exuberance of the Windies' victory were two setbacks on the English side. On the second day, England player Graham Thorpe was "severely reprimanded for dissent." After being called out on a "legs before wickets" by the umpire, Thorpe had the gall to actually stand silently for nine seconds before returning to his pavilion. Referee Barry Jarman was said to have fainted upon watching footage of Roberto Alomar spitting in an umpire's face in 1996. Also, Mike Atherton, who once batted for 10 hours and 45 minutes without being called out in 1995, stepped down as England's team captain following his sub-par Test.

So the next time you find yourself watching a baseball game, and the pitcher seems to be making too many throws to first base or the batter keeps stepping out of the box to knock the dirt off his cleats, take a deep breath and be thankful you're not watching cricket.

And the next time you find yourself disputing a "legs before wickets" call, for goodness sake, go straight to your pavilion.

Local legislators doubtful of bill's success in future

"There has been no coordinating effort between the Senate and the House," Oleen said.

A combined committee, she said, would have the opportunity to discuss and come together on one reform package the Legislature and governor both support.

"This plan doesn't do that," she said. Vice President of Institutional Advancement Bob Krause said it is the Senate's turn to take action on the bill. Despite the decision to postpone reform, Krause said it is important to continue to work on the underlying issues of the plan.

"I think the plan's sentiments concerning finances and their ultimate goals of greater coordination between the community colleges and regents universities are good," he said.

"But the main question now is how to get there."

One question raised at the hearing on Monday was how the $145 million plan would be funded, Oleen said. House members were unable to answer that question.

"I've been here before when a multi-year funding plan was presented, and we didn't fund it fully," Oleen said. "We don't want that to happen again."

"I'm in a protective mode, instead of negative one."

Krause said he also has heard the bill could be moved to a governor's blue-ribbon task force that would move the proposal out of the political arena.

Because K-State is governed by the regents, Krause said the university is obligated to support the regents' cautionary approach toward the plan. The board has publicly stated its opposition to the reform plan.

He said the board is concerned the Legislature doesn't address all of the needed improvement issues and there might be a loss in ongoing initiatives. The board supports bringing the community colleges under its coordination, though, he said.

Wefald said he thought most of the state universities, as well as the rest of the state, are in support of the regents.

Despite the Senate's mainly negative response, Rep. Jeff Peterson, R-Manhattan, said he still supports the bill.

"I supported the bill," Peterson said. "It would put everything under one council and help K-State in the long run."

The new council would help eliminate the duplication of services between regents universities and community colleges, Peterson said. He said the council would be able to eliminate the problem of students attending community colleges at a lower cost than classes offered at K-State.

"The council will be able to view better what is needed in each region," Peterson said.

Peterson said the restructuring also would improve relations between regents universities and community colleges.

"The council will make community colleges more accountable and allow the regents system to work with them in a cooperative role instead of an adversarial role," he said.

Relatives, friends reminisce about K-State student's life

"Everybody Tim met, and those who knew him, was his friend. I know that is such a cliché, but he fits it so well. He was a brother to me," Sherwood said.

Another close friend of Pentico was Aaron Larsen, who graduated from K-State in elementary education in spring 1996 and now teaches art at Concordia Middle School.

Larsen said most of Pentico's weekends were spent in Missouri with his girlfriend of a little more than six years. He said Pentico was meticulous about his dress and he always looked good, had the right style.

Julie Fell, Pentico's girlfriend, said Pentico had decided to stay an extra day before going home.

"He was a very wonderful person who cared about everyone. He had a lot of close friends," said Fell, who teaches elementary education in Humansville, Mo. "Not only was he my boyfriend, he was my best friend."

Nathan Woellhof, senior in anthropology, was Pentico's roommate and now returns home to an almost empty apartment that once contained most of Pentico's furniture.

Woellhof initially had heard that Pentico had caused the automobile accident and couldn't believe he would do something like that.

"I got really angry that he didn't do anything wrong," Woellhof said when he later learned there was nothing Pentico could have done to prevent the accident.

News of the accident also shocked Pentico's close friend Keri Adams, senior in pre-med, who frequently saw Pentico on campus and when they would return home to Concordia.

Adams said Pentico appeared to be kind of quiet and laid back, but was someone whom anyone could trust and depend on and who worked really well with kids.

"Tim was a really good friend and will be missed by everyone," Adams said.

David Laurie Jr., professor in secondary education, taught Pentico in two of his classes.

Laurie said Pentico was working toward his coaching endorsement.

At the beginning of Laurie's classes, he gives each student a questionnaire to fill out in order to get to know his students a little better.

Pentico had responded that he pictured himself as a successful coach and elementary teacher in five years, and that attending classes and working harder would make K-State a better university.

Laurie said the thing he remembers most about Pentico was his love for cars.

"Tim was never quiet when it came to talking about cars. He talked about them a lot," Laurie said.

KSDB falls under attack during diversity forum

"This is about selling KSDB, it is not about diversity," said Cliff Conrad, an instructional service staff member at Hale Library. "This guy's pitching his radio station, that's fine, but this meeting is about diversity."

"Right before I got up, the guy from KSDB said, 'Look, I'm not going to sacrifice XYZ for diversity,'" Conrad said.

"This meeting is about money and radio stations. They don't want to listen to (Indian music) because they don't think it will sell."

Conrad said the panel's comments are what made him and other audience members leave the theater yet return for their fair share of voiced opinion.

Other audience members joined in the discussion on how to recruit people to diverse activities and relate to other cultures.

Chris Dean, Collegian readers' representative and senior in print journalism, said the Collegian wants feedback about how it is doing regarding diversity.

"We need to look around closely to this kind of issue," he said. "People have so-so opinions of diversity coverage. Diversity should be an important issue for any campus."

Parsons said staff members reflect the audience and news content reflects diversity. He held up a USA Today newspaper and said the top half at least has coverage of one woman and minority every day.

Richard Baker, news director of KKSU, said he doesn't want it to be a melting pot. He wants to keep the special diversity each culture reflects and teach integration to children in school right now.

"We're afraid of things we don't understand," Baker said. "There are a lot of things we don't know about our history."

college, said he is supportive of King's move to increase the practical education efforts such as the cooperative education program and internships.

"Industries are hoping that our people come out more prepared, to produce and to contribute almost immediately," said Rathbone, director of the National Institute for Land Management and Training.

"I think, within limits, we can try to accommodate them, but there's always going to be some learning on the job when you go to work."

In addition to enhancing the students' practical education, King said a shift is needed from the traditional teaching-based engineering education to the more effective learning-based method. This shift is partly in response to new accreditation criteria, that will require an assessment of what students have learned, rather than what instructors have taught.

David Soldan, professor of electrical and computer engineering, said his department previously had been working on some of the issues presented in King's plan and will continue to address them in light of King's goals.

"One effort we've made is to develop a better interface between our students and people working in industry and alumni working in industry to provide the students with a better idea of what they're going to see when they go to work," Soldan said.

"I think we've figured more than two-thirds of our faculty has significant industrial experience, and so they provide some of that, but it's still not as good as somebody that's out there right now doing it, so we've tried to find ways to facilitate that," he said.

King said innovation and complex technology in industry are significant factors in the way engineering is taught.

King has been presenting his plan to alumni in industry, and he said the response has been favorable.

"They seem to be excited," King said. "We're asking industry to play a role and they are willing to come in and do that. They need to be actively involved."

"CHICAGO REVISITED" IS ONE OF THE PIECES OF ART ON DISPLAY BY BEA OPELKA AT THE COLUMBIAN THEATRE, AT 521 LINCOLN AVE. IN WAMEGO.

CLIF PALMBERG/Collegian

The permanent force of landscape Artist Bea Opelka's landscapes continue rich tradition of painting prairie

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

You can drive five miles out of Manhattan and find the kind of landscapes Kansas artist Bea Opelka immortalizes in her lush oil paintings.

In warmer weather, multitudes of greens and yellows blend effortlessly into a rich, natural spectacle. Northwest Kansas is a staging ground for a great show of colors, both in the landscape and in the sky. It can be both a landscape that seems to stretch on forever, or a more immediate one enclosed by playfully arching hills.

Opelka responds to this landscape system and a few others in the show "Bea Opelka: The Circumstance of My Surroundings" at the Columbian Theatre in Wamego until April 26. The exhibition is an opportunity to glimpse an artist truly in love with the Kansas landscape and willing to paint it in less glamorous circumstances, such as a bleak, brown winter.

In a work such as "Summertime," an oil on canvas from 1996, an almost-French Impressionist sky of light blues and white-lavender cotton candy clouds plunges into a distant deep-blue landscape resembling a sea. The colors from the foreground to the background shift in various tints and shades of green, yellow and blue, cohering the seemingly infinite amount of natural details. On the whole, the surface of the canvas is as delicious as a freshly iced cake.

Opelka finds a permanence in the landscape that is appealing — especially when her early childhood displacement is considered. A native of Lithuania, the artist was moved during World War II into a displacement camp in Germany until finally emigrating to the United States in 1949 at the age of 12. She lived with her husband in Chicago until the early 1970s, when she moved to Prairie Village, Kan.

Although Opelka remembers a pleasant childhood of playing outside with her sister and eating vegetables straight from the garden, the hardships of war still inform her work and perhaps explain the appeal of the landscape for her.

"Even during the war, traveling through Germany in very adverse conditions, there were times we would find ourselves in a forest and hear the birds chirping, when you weren't hearing bombs dropping," Opelka said. "It was a strange dichotomy. But I always find that soothing. There's a sense of some sort of permanent peacefulness in nature."

Opelka is a Kansas landscapist in the Robert Sudlow tradition. Sudlow being perhaps the grandfather of the Kansas prairie. Opelka developed a friendship with Sudlow in the 1970s when she would drive from Prairie Village to Lawrence just to paint with the master and his students.

Sudlow, and subsequent painters like Opelka, can be thanked for giving the Kansas landscape the reverence and complexity it deserves, as opposed to stylistically flat and one-dimensional painters such as 1930s and 40s painter John Stuart Curry. Unlike the sometimes somber and more realist Sudlow, however, Opelka uses a splashy amount of color to achieve her somewhat romantic landscapes.

While Opelka does succeed brilliantly in landscape, she is equally adept in her approach to the urban landscape. Painting Broadway Street in Kansas City, Mo., in "Fog in the City," an oil on canvas from 1998, Opelka finds the very essence of the city.

Instead of attempting to glamorize what is a very unglamorous city, Opelka lets the fog hide the majority of her painting and gives us instead a street view of brick buildings and light automobile traffic not too unlike downtown Wamego. True, it is a simple subject and not a necessarily sublime one, but Kansas City is a city where one can easily find oneself in the midst of a metropolis, but with a small-town feel.

In "Chicago Revisited," an oil on canvas from 1997, the artist has painted her favorite view of the exalted skyline — a southern view of Lake Shore Drive to the commanding John Hancock Tower. It's an impossible view perspective, but Opelka has arranged an amalgamation of views into the painting — the row upon row of skyscrapers splay across her canvas like so many strips of color and line.

"A photograph wouldn't be able to get that scene," Opelka said. "The skyline would be further in the distance, but that isn't the sense I have when I'm driving down there. I don't feel it's dishonest because when I'm there that's how it feels to me."

The Chicago painting, at nearly 4 feet by 6 feet, is one of the larger pieces in the show.

Opelka likes working in a large scale because she said it allows the viewer to almost step into the painting.

When it comes down to it, that is the ultimate goal of any landscapist — to give the viewer as close a feeling of the actual landscape as one can give. It's not a competition with nature, but more of an homage to a constant force in the lives of traditionally agrarian Kansans.

For Opelka, at least, the Kansas landscape is more than just a sensual organism. It's something she can depend on.

Acting troupe to revive Shakespearean traditions

AMY MILLER
Kansas State Collegian

What began 10 years ago as a small troop of Shakespearean actors traveling around Virginia in a powder-blue station wagon, has evolved into a company that today tours both nationally and abroad.

Shenandoah Shakespeare Express is a company dedicated to bringing the Bard's works to the masses, like actors did centuries ago.

Tomorrow and Friday the company will perform "Measure for Measure," "Richard III" and "Taming of the Shrew" at the K-State Student Union.

"The guy was a great, great playwright, and he wrote great stuff," said Jim Warren, managing director and co-founder of the company. "We try to recreate the conditions that he wrote his plays for."

These conditions include keeping the lights on the audience, and enabling the actors to see and interact with spectators. They may say their lines to one lucky person in the audience, or get the spectators to participate by playing the part of a crowd. Warren said this allows people to enjoy Shakespeare's writings, not just as poetry on paper, but as live performances.

"We're conditioned to think of him as a great poet to be read and as high culture. It's like spinach; it's good for you," he said.

However, Shakespeare wrote his plays to be enjoyed by mixed crowds of royalty, peasants and anyone else in between.

"He wrote to appeal to everyone, though not everyone will get everything," he said.

Shakespeare used eloquent language to appeal to well-educated people, but he also included bawdy jokes for the less articulate and added sword fights to keep things entertaining for the audience.

"The plays are fun and exciting and gritty," he said.

Adam Schreengost, marketing director for the company, said although the plays are entertaining, the actors have a profound understanding of the text.

"It works for everyone," Schreengost said. "Kids enjoy it because it's lively. Scholars and academics like us because we understand the language."

Warren said although the company strives to remain consistent with how the plays were performed hundreds of years ago, it made an exception in allowing women onstage, which was illegal in Shakespeare's day.

"There are too many great women actors out there to deny them a spot in the company," he said.

However, true to those times, the company participates in a little gender-bending. The difference is that now the tables are turned and the company occasionally has actresses that play male characters. The actress who will play Kate in "Taming of the Shrew" Friday, will also appear in the title role of "Richard III" tomorrow.

Warren said because Shakespeare wrote his characters' lines to show what they're thinking, the actors don't act out emotions between the lines. This concept, called "living thought" allows for fewer pauses between lines, unlike in most modern writing. It also is one reason for the word "Express" in the company's name.

"We don't act out the stuff between the lines," he said. "Combine that with the fact that we don't do special lighting and we don't have special sets that need to be changed between scenes. We can do it in two hours without cutting a word."

Shenandoah Shakespeare Express will give three performances in the K-State Student Union Grand Ballroom, sponsored by Union Program Council.

"Measure for Measure" will be free and only for K-State students, courtesy of President Jon Wefald, at 2:30 p.m. tomorrow. "Richard III" will be at seven tomorrow evening. Tickets are $5 for students, $8 for faculty and the public, and can be purchased until 4 p.m. tomorrow. A dinner theater featuring "Taming of the Shrew" will be at seven Friday night. Tickets are $13 for students and $15 for faculty and the public. Dinner theater tickets must be purchased by 4 p.m. today. All tickets are available in the UPC office on the third floor of the Union.

Busy day ends with basketball defeat

2:45 p.m. — Everyone jogs off the court to the locker room, where they change and pose for a team picture with two Cat Pack girls who were with the team for the day.

Brit asks Coach Ethridge about a game scheme while getting ready. Junior guard/forward Jenny Coalson decides to ride with us to the pregame meal at the Ramada Inn.

2:59 p.m., My car — We discuss today's practice. The players agree that the practice wasn't that great.

"We seemed kind of slow on defense," Coalson says.

I ask about the scoreboard and its place during the practice.

They tell me the managers use it to keep track of how many times the ball goes into the basket when the team runs offense.

The visitor score was the number of times the five guys the women play against in practice keep the team from scoring. "What did it say today, 30-something to nine?" Brit asks. I check my notebook. Home, nine. Visitor, 38. "Oh," Coalson says.

3:08 p.m., Ramada Inn — Patterson leads the team in a pre-meal prayer. Finkes checks out the buffet line and makes sure everyone understands there is Alfredo sauce and gravy on the buffet. "This is Alfredo. This is the gravy," she says pointing. There is a general excitement that fried chicken is offered today. "We usually have chicken or chicken —" Nicky Ramage says as Finkes interrupts. "Or roast beef," Finkes says.

3:41 p.m. — Patterson wraps up the meal with a small pep talk. "We've knocked off six ranked teams since I've been here," she says. She wants to make Iowa State, who's currently ranked No. 24, the seventh.

5:25 p.m., Bramble — Brit goes in for treatment for an aching back. She receives electroshock therapy on her back as Meaux talks to her about a new treatment that would fatigue tight muscles. "You'd think I do enough to fatigue my muscles," Brit jokes.

5:34 p.m. — Taping time again. Even one of the evening's referees comes in to be taped.

Mental Note: New story idea — how much stock in medical tape supply companies does K-State hold?

5:53 p.m., Locker room — The team locates various shoes, socks and braces as Ethridge jots last-minute defense notes on the board. Patterson and Ethridge get immediate attention as they stand at the board.

6:07 p.m. — Patterson and Ethridge go over a play they see differently. Patterson asks Harris to explain the play, and she seems confused.

6:09 p.m. — They got it.

6:20 p.m. — Patterson wraps up her pregame talk with the keys to the game, which includes starting each half vs. the Cyclones expecting a quick release of the ball.

Ethridge adds that the team scores most of their points off offensive rebounds and transition points, "easy threes," as she calls them.

In regards to Cat threes, Patterson tells Woodlee, "You can shoot the ball. Please feel free to do so or this lady (pointing to Brit) has permission to grab you by the ponytail."

Brit says, "I thought you were going to say I have permission to shoot the three." The team chuckles.

6:23 p.m. — Ethridge said thanks for the chance and the opportunity to play tonight's game in a team prayer. The team follows with the Lord's Prayer.

6:28 p.m. — The team gets pumped, clapping and singing the fight song in the tunnel.

6:59 p.m. — Brit's introduced. She runs through the cheerleader/Cat Pack line and hurls a T-shirt into the crowd.

Gametime — First half

17:46 — Brit drives the baseline, forcing Iowa State to knock the ball out of bounds.

14:30 — Brit attempts another jumper that doesn't go in.

13:59 — Brit trips up an Iowa State player and steals the ball, dishing it off to Harris for a bucket attempt.

Brit gets two on her own offensive rebound.

8:38 — After a steal, Brit draws a foul at the baseline. She fires up another shot after the inbound.

4:23 — Brit grabs a defensive board from a Ramage miss and is fouled. She sinks both foul shots.

0:47.1 — Brit hand-checked an Iowa State player, and the crowd doesn't agree with the foul.

Halftime — Iowa State 44, K-State 19

Second half

18:53 — Brit forces an Iowa State turnover.

17:17 — Brit nails a layup from a Ramage assist.

12:16 — Brit checks out; Marshella Webb checks in.

9:19 — Brit returns at a timeout.

3:02 — Brit is called for her fourth foul, and the Cyclone connects on her free throws.

0:33.4 — Brit is out for the game with her fifth foul, and Webb comes back in.

9:33 p.m., Postgame — A somber Patterson enters the press conference, apologizing to the media for making them watch the game. "We played about seven or eight minutes tonight," she says. "I couldn't find one thing I felt we did well on either end."

On Brit's performance, Patterson said, "She was cold at the beginning of the game. As the game went on, her offensive productivity was null, and I just thought she began to force a lot of shots. She led us in rebounding, playing hard enough to grab the loose ball and rebounding in the paint in spite of the posts, but then she'd try to score like a post instead of kicking it out."

9:49 p.m. — Brit, with red-rimmed eyes, enters the press conference with Coalson. "I think it's more frustrating because I realize it's countdown time, and that's the second-to-the-last game and there's not much time left. I don't want to have a pity party — that's just the way it is."

2 a.m. — Brit picks up Josh at the Manhattan airport after the men arrive home from their game at Iowa State. Both teams had the same result, and no doubt both players had a lot to talk about.

This reporter stayed home and let them talk.

Do you have a lot to do and just a little time? # Supreme court bans lie-detector evidence in courtroom

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Lie-detector evidence can be banned from trials, the Supreme Court ruled Tuesday, citing concern about its scientific soundness. But the justices left open the possibility that polygraph results might have to be allowed in some cases.

"There is simply no consensus that polygraph evidence is reliable," the court said, rejecting 8-1 a California airman's claim that he had a constitutional right to tell a court-martial jury that he passed a lie-detector test.

The ban on use of lie-detector results in military trials is a valid means of advancing the legitimate interest in barring unreliable evidence, Justice Clarence Thomas wrote for the court.

Some courts allow the use of lie-detector results in criminal trials but most state and federal courts ban it. Tuesday's ruling allows each of those courts to continue its own policy.

Four justices among the eight-member majority said a future case might present a more compelling argument that some defendants have the right to use favorable polygraph results.

Writing for the four, Justice Anthony M. Kennedy agreed the military rule did not violate the Sixth Amendment right to present a defense. "I doubt, though, that the rule of ... exclusion is wise, and some later case might present a more compelling case for introduction of the testimony than this one does," he said.

Kennedy also said "there is much inconsistency between the government's extensive use of polygraphs to make vital security determinations and the argument it makes here, stressing the inaccuracy of these tests."

He was joined by Justices Sandra Day O'Connor, Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Stephen G. Breyer.

Justice John Paul Stevens dissented from the overall ruling, saying it "rests on a serious undervaluation of the importance of the citizen's constitutional right to present a defense to a criminal charge."

In the lie-detector case, Thomas wrote that various courts may reasonably reach differing conclusions as to whether polygraph evidence should be admitted.

"To this day, the scientific community remains extremely polarized about the reliability of polygraph techniques," Thomas wrote. "There is simply no way to know in a particular case whether a polygraph examiner's conclusion is accurate."

Charles Hobson of the Criminal Justice Legal Foundation, which supported the government in the case, said the ruling could make it easier to exclude other types of evidence, such as expert testimony, when its reliability is in dispute.

The case stems from a military rule signed by President Bush in 1991 that forbade any reference to lie-detector tests in criminal trials.

The rule was challenged by Edward G. Scheffer, who was stationed at March Air Force base in California in 1992 when he was charged with writing bad checks, using methamphetamine and being absent without leave.

A lie-detector test indicated he answered truthfully when he denied taking drugs, but a urine test was positive for methamphetamine. Scheffer was not allowed to use the lie-detector result at trial.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces said the rule violated Scheffer's right under the Constitution's Sixth Amendment to defend himself. The court ordered a military judge to consider whether the evidence was admissible, and if so, to set aside Scheffer's conviction and sentence.

In reversing that ruling, the Supreme Court said criminal defendants' right to present evidence can be subject to reasonable restrictions.

Thomas' opinion was joined in full by Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Antonin Scalia and David H. Souter.

In other action Tuesday, the court:

- Heard arguments on whether the National Endowment for the Arts can deny grants to artists whose work is considered indecent. The decency standard was challenged by a group of performance artists.

- Struck down a federal harbor-use tax imposed on goods exported by ship from U.S. ports. The tax has been a source of hundreds of millions of dollars in government revenue.

- Ruled that people involved in lawsuits about alleged copyright infringement always are entitled to have a jury rather than a judge decide how much money is awarded.

Senate debates special funds to improve state historic sites

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Claiming politics wasn't their motivation, Senate Democrats failed Tuesday to take $3 million earmarked to honor former U.S. Sen. Bob Dole and use most of it to improve state historic sites.

The debate occurred as the Senate passed a bill appropriating $69.5 million for capital improvement projects. The vote on the bill was 35-5.

Democrats lost a 10-26 party-line vote to strike the funding that Gov. Bill Graves recommended to help finance the Dole Institute for Public Service and Public Policy at the University of Kansas.

The rest of the $8 million to fund the project would come from private donations.

The center will train public officials and sponsor programs aimed at issues Dole focused on during his career. It also will include some of Dole's artifacts and files.

"My efforts are in no way to embarrass our former senator," said Sen. Chris Steineger, D-Kansas City, who wanted to take $2.35 million from the Dole allocation. He wanted to apply it to historic sites he called "a little bit embarrassing for visitors to see them."

Senate President Dick Bond, R-Overland Park, said Dole did more than any other public official to help Steineger's home Wyandotte County.

"Maybe we are trying to embarrass his memory," Bond said.

"The kind of legacy Bob Dole left for this state is unmatched, even by Dwight David Eisenhower. It would be a great embarrassment to this Senate if the amendment passes," Bond said.

Steineger also suggested building one place to house documents from Dole and the state's other former U.S. senator, Nancy Kassebaum Baker.

"What about Nancy Kassebaum? What are we going to do for her?" Steineger asked.

Sen. Christine Downey, D-Newton, said Dole would prefer the money be spent on historic sites rather than a building with his name on it.

"This institute needs to be created, but why can't it be created with private funds?" Downey said. "If Senator Dole was here today, he would say put it in historic sites. This isn't a partisan issue."

The House Appropriations Committee deleted the Dole money from its version of the capital budget for the state's 1999 fiscal year, which begins July 1. Members want to know more about private fund-raising activities.

Also in the Senate plan was $10 million Graves recommended to make massive improvements in the state park system, which he said have been neglected to the point of embarrassment.

The Senate also included $750,000 for Statehouse improvements plus another $347,000 for the current budget year to improve the elevators in the Capitol.

The spending bill also authorized $16 million in bonds for expanding KSU Stadium. The bonds would be paid by fees from luxury boxes and seat backs that would go for $700 per season.

Also earmarked in the spending plan was $848,000 for a commercial exhibition center at the state fairgrounds in Hutchinson.

The Senate also passed a $160 million supplemental appropriations bill to cover various unexpected costs in the current budget year — including a $35.7 million transfer from the state general fund to the state budget stabilization fund.

Trash can overflow. Dust can gather.
But sooner or later, clean underwear and socks are needed.

Laundry has to be done.

Most students' first experience with laundry facilities is in residence halls.

Beth Williams, freshman in computer science and Spanish, lives in Ford Hall. After searching through her change for quarters, she said she lugs her laundry from the seventh floor to the basement of Ford.

Williams said the worst thing about laundry is hanging up the clothes that can't be dried.

"We walk into our room, and we have clothes hanging from every available space trying to dry," she said. "The dryers never fully dry the clothes either, so we have to hang those clothes up to dry, too."

Williams said some students stay in the laundry room and study while doing their laundry, but she prefers not to.

"I trust to leave it down there unattended," she said. "I usually don't stay down there with it."

Williams said without her mother there to help her, she has ruined some clothes.

"I've shrunk a lot of clothes," she said. "I've managed to dye some clothes different colors, too. I'm actually pretty good at that."

Annie Pensick, sophomore undecided, said she used to do laundry in the residence halls, but now she lives in the Alpha Xi Delta sorority house. She said doing laundry in the sorority house is better than in the halls because she doesn't have to feed quarters to the machines.

"I don't have to pay to do laundry each time, because it is part of my house bill," she said.

Pensick said she doesn't like anything about laundry, especially the amount of time it takes.

Living in a sorority house, though, allows her to do other things while she does her laundry, Pensick said. She said she doesn't have to sit in the laundry room and wait as students often do in residence halls.

Lori Anselmo, sophomore in art therapy, said she liked doing laundry in the residence halls better than in the laundry facilities at her Woodway apartment.

"The dorms were better because they were cheaper, and the dryers worked a bit better," Anselmo said.

Anselmo said it costs $1 to wash and $1 to dry clothes at the Woodway complex.

While most apartment buildings don't have washers and dryers in the individual apartments, University Commons is one complex that includes them.

Ben Falen, sophomore in milling science, said having a washer and dryer in the apartment is great.

"It's like living at home, but better,"
he said.

Falen said the washer and dryer cause the rent at University Commons to be a little bit higher. But, he said, it's worth it.

Falen said he hasn't ruined any clothes since living on his own.

"Normally, my mom ruined my clothes," he said.

Falen said he used to live in the Delta Sigma Phi fraternity house. He said the laundry fee was included in the house bill, so he didn't have to search for quarters there, either. But, he said, the disad-vantage in a fraternity house is sharing laundry facilities with about 50 other guys.

For students who don't have any laundry facilities available to them where they live, laundromats are the only option.

If students are looking for entertainment to amuse themselves while waiting on laundry, Laundry Land, Wash Palace and Westloop Coin-A-Matic are the places to go.

Each has a pool table, video games and a television. On Wednesday night, Wash Palace shows a new-release movie.

"If it catches on, we'll do it every Wednesday. From the minute I get here in the morning, I'll put a movie in. We'll show them all day," Wash Palace owner
David Wataha said.

Wataha said Wash Palace is the only laundromat in town that has a jumbo washer.

Many laundromats have dry cleaning services and drop-off laundry services.

Florida execution eases minds of murder victims' survivors

ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLBY, Kan. — "It's done and I'm just glad it's over," John Schroeder said after getting word from Florida that the man convicted of killing his son 13 years ago was dead.

"These last couple of weeks have been a jolt, you know," Schroeder's son, Rick, 28, was one of three Kansas victims of a 1985 crime spree that claimed five victims.

On Tuesday morning, Daniel Remeta, 40, was electrocuted in a state prison at Starke, Fla. He died for the murder of Mehrle "Chet" Reeder, a 60-year-old clerk at a convenience store in Ocala.

That shooting started a six-day crime rampage that carried through Arkansas and into northwest Kansas.

It ended in a gun battle that left Remeta, his girlfriend and a hitchhiker in custody and a companion shot dead.

Rick Schroeder and Glenn Moore, 55, were slain execution-style on a county road near Levant on Feb. 13, 1985, shortly after being kidnapped from a grain elevator where the manager was shot and wounded.

Earlier that day, Larry McFarland was shot and killed at a Grainfield restaurant, and Thomas County Undersheriff Ben Albright was shot and seriously wounded after he started following a car speeding along Interstate 70 near Levant, just west of Colby.

Thomas County Sheriff Tom Jones, in office just 29 days at the time, was driving to Topeka when Albright radioed that he'd been shot. He turned around and started back for Colby.

A short time later, Colby Police Chief Randy Jones, who'd seen the pickup truck into which Schroeder and Moore had been forced going out of town, found their bodies on the highway.

Officers caught up with Remeta and his companions at a farm in Rawlins County, about 17 miles north of Colby.

Remeta, Lisa Dunn and James Hunter were captured, and Mark Walter, 18, was shot and killed.

Tom Jones, Undersheriff Mike Baughn and Kansas Bureau of Investigation agent Mark Kendrick were all in Florida for Tuesday's execution.

"I wanted to rid myself and my community of Daniel Remeta," Jones said. "We're a very conservative, Christian-oriented community. We tend to be warm, open-hearted and trusting."

"And a lot of that has been taken away from us, and we don't like that."

The sheriff said he doesn't expect the execution to erase Remeta and the crimes from his memory.

"Even after today, there won't be a day where I don't encounter Remeta's name in some form."

Still, he told a Florida reporter, "I will know that Daniel Remeta will never harm another person in his life. I'm convicted justice was carried out on behalf of my state and your state."

John Schroeder, who had suffered a badly broken arm in a fall, chose not to travel to Florida for the execution.

"I had mixed emotions about going," he said.

Schroeder's widow, now Brenda Mattson, also did not go to Florida. John Schroeder said she had to undergo emergency surgery a few days ago, "But she's doing fine."

Hunter and Dunn were both convicted in the deaths of Moore and Schroeder, then acquitted after being granted new trials. Hunter, who was from Amoret, Mo., and said he had just hitched a ride with Remeta and his companions, died of a heart attack four days after he was freed in 1988.

As he went to his death Tuesday, Remeta showed no emotion and said nothing. But in a statement read by his religious adviser, he said, "If this death brings comfort to the friends and families of those harmed and initiates real healing, justice is truly served."

Kansas sheriff faces 3 felony charges

ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBUS, Kan. — Prosecutors depicted Cherokee County Sheriff Pat Collins as a man who lost his temper and went too far. But the defense said Tuesday that Collins was simply doing his job in quelling angry criminals when he used Mace on inmates and kicked them.

The southeast Kansas sheriff faces three felony counts of aggravated assault for threatening inmates with a gun and six misdemeanor counts of mistreating inmates for spraying them with pepper spray.

Collins also is charged with misdemeanor counts of mistreatment of a confined person for kicking inmate Timothy Vance while Vance was restrained in a chair by handcuffs and leg irons and for stepping on and kicking inmate Roger Wells while Wells was handcuffed and lying face-down.

The two separate incidents occurred after Wells led deputies on a chase and Vance escaped from jail.

Wells died in a car accident Friday in Columbus. Defense lawyers filed a motion Tuesday to dismiss the charges involving Wells, but the judge decided to proceed with them and let the jury decide.

In each case, prosecutor Gary Foiles said, the inmates or arrested suspects had been unruly, but were calm by the time they were allegedly abused by Collins.

"He wasn't trying to quell any disturbance," Foiles said of Collins' use of Mace on inmates in their cells. "He went up there to get even."

Defense attorney Kurt Kerns said the inmates were still banging on walls and making noise when the Mace was used.

He also said Collins took his gun into the jail because a door was left open after an inmate hit a jailer with a sock filled with a bar of soap in an unsuccessful escape attempt. Kerns said Collins thought some of the inmates might have gotten out of their cells and into the kitchen, where knives were stored. He later discovered that the inmates actually had stayed in their cells.

"He did not commit a crime," Kerns said of Collins. "He did his job."

Foiles said Collins kicked and stepped on Wells because he was angry, but Kerns said Collins was holding Wells in place because the suspect was spitting and fighting officers. Vance was being held in a small room and refused to move his legs when Collins walked by, so Collins ended up bumping Vance when he passed, Kerns said.

Kerns also told the jury that previous testimony by inmates has not been consistent.

Before opening statements, six men and six women were chosen Monday from a pool of 120 people, many of whom said they knew Collins. A few potential jurors said they believed he was innocent.

"I like Pat Collins," said one woman who was excused Tuesday. "I voted for Pat Collins."

Attorney General Carla Stovall, who filed the charges, also sought Collins' suspension and ouster, but a judge ruled that Collins can stay in office until criminal charges against him have been resolved. Collins vowed to step down if he is convicted of a crime.

The trial is expected to last about a week. Several of Collins' employees and one former deputy also face charges that include inmate abuse.

Jailer Freddy Fry already had pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor battery charge. The sheriff's deputies and a former deputy face misdemeanor charges of mistreatment of a confined person, official misconduct and theft.

A judge has not ruled on a felony aggravated battery charge filed against deputies Robert Thomas, Michael Adams and Terry Clugston. They are accused of striking inmate Joseph Jones, using a stun gun on him and throwing him over a fence.

The sheriff also faces two separate counts of filing a fraudulent state income tax form.

Campaign targets methamphetamines

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — U.S. Attorney Jackie Williams launched a new public service campaign Monday aimed at lowering the use of methamphetamines.

Several high school students at a magnet school where Williams spoke said they knew people who used methamphetamines, also known as crank, but didn't realize it was a deadly drug.

Kristen Lancaster, 16, a junior at the magnet school for students interested in law or public or social services, told Williams during the news conference that many girls take the drug to lose weight.

In an interview after the news conference, she said she knew lots of people who use methamphetamines.

"Oh yeah," she said. "It's everywhere." Williams said authorities seized 99 methamphetamine labs between Oct. 1, 1996, and Oct. 1, 1997, in Kansas. The labs were found in Kansas cities that include Wichita, Kansas City, Valley Center, Hutchinson, Great Bend and Garden City.

The drug can be made with common, household chemicals and over-the-counter medications.

The stimulant is highly addictive and can cause hallucinations, sores, weight loss and convulsions.

The public service campaign, called "Life or Meth," will feature public service announcements in Kansas, Iowa, Missouri, Nebraska and South Dakota that try to reach 13- to 17-year-olds. It is being funded by an $8 million federal grant.

One TV commercial features a meth-user having convulsions on a bathroom floor, and an announcer says the convulsions will last another 11 hours.

The second TV commercial shows a young boy asking a dealer how much methamphetamine cost, then illustrates how the drug could cost the boy his friends, everything he owns and possibly his life.

A radio commercial titled "Fashion Show" focuses on young girls who might take the drug to lose weight. During the commercial, an announcer talks about clothes and accessories that would hide festering sores or match dark eye circles.

Angie Barnes, 17, a junior at the Downtown Magnet High School, said the commercials were needed because teen-agers don't know methamphetamines can be as deadly and addictive as crack.

But both Barnes and Lancaster were unsure if the commercials actually would convince teens to stop using methamphetamines.

"They'll probably just take it as another attempt to scare us out of doing it," Lancaster said.

Statewide methamphetamine usage increases in past 5 years

JENNIFER JANSONIS
Kansas State Collegian

Methamphetamines are on the rise in Kansas, law enforcement officials say.

Kirk Simone, second lieutenant of the Kansas Highway Patrol, said the number of seizures of methamphetamines has increased over the past five years.

"In 1997, a little more than 58 pounds of methamphetamines were seized. Most of the methamphetamines were manufactured in California or Mexico, and a good percentage was destined for Kansas," Simone said.

He said there has been an increase over the past five to six years in the amount of drugs seized on major highways that run through the United States, such as Interstate 70.

"Kansas officers are being better educated on how to look for drugs during arrests," Simone said. "This has led to the increase in drug arrests."

Bruce Coffman, special agent for the Kansas Bureau of Investigations, said 23 methamphetamine labs have been found so far this year.

"We find meth labs through investigations, search warrants for some other offense, and concerned citizen calls," Coffman said.

William Reece, Riley County detective sergeant of investigations, said methamphetamine arrests have increased the past six months in Manhattan.

"Methamphetamines have recently become more popular. There is more information being made available, and more cases are brought to court," Reece said.

Reece said during other arrests people in Riley County were found more frequently for possession of methamphetamines than cocaine in the past six months.

Reece said methamphetamines could be found as close as Aggieville.

Coffman said anything used to manufacture methamphetamines can be bought at a hardware or convenience store.

Methamphetamines are the most addictive narcotic commonly used, Coffman said.

"Without long-term treatment, it is nearly impossible to rehabilitate after a continued use," he said.

To combat the problem, Coffman said the KBI recognizes Kansas as part of a High Intensity Drug Traffic Area.

A new public service campaign, "Life or Meth," also has been launched in Kansas and four other states to create awareness about the effects of methamphetamines.

Coffman said methamphetamine use is linked to violence against women, child abuse, robberies, gang activity and homicides.

"The drug itself interbreeds paranoia," Coffman said.

"It is a self-destructive drug."

Montana Freeman convicted in trial for 81-day standoff

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BILLINGS, Mont. — A federal court jury on Tuesday found five Montana Freeman guilty of criminal charges in the first trial resulting from the 81-day standoff between the anti-government militants and the FBI in 1996.

However, the jury acquitted Edwin Clark, one-time owner of the foreclosed farm that formed most of the Freeman stronghold in rural eastern Montana. Clark's lawyer had argued he was desperate to save the farm and swept up in events.

Four of the Freeman were convicted of being accessories after the armed holdup of an ABC television news crew attempting to film a story on the Freeman.

They were Steven Hance, and his sons, John and James, all of Charlotte, N.C., and Jon Barry Nelson, of Marion, Kan. All three Hances also were convicted of being fugitives in possession of firearms.

Elwin Ward was found innocent of being an accessory to any crimes committed by other members of the Freeman. But he was convicted of submitting a false claim to the Internal Revenue Service.

Ward tried to pay a $143,000 federal tax bill with a bogus Freeman warrant for twice that amount, and requested a refund of the excess.

Clark had been charged with bank fraud for trying to deposit a $100 million Freeman warrant in the Garfield County bank in Jordan, and as an accessory to the other crimes, but he was acquitted on all charges.

"Mr. Clark, you are free as of now," U.S. District Judge John Coughenour told Clark.

Clark has been in jail since the standoff ended June 13, 1996.

Rec Report

Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex

Fitness Facts

Since the heart is a muscle, it can become bigger and stronger through exercise that progressively increases the body's demand for oxygen. This type of exercise is called "aerobic" which means "with oxygen." Aerobic exercise involves steady, continuous motion of the large muscles which places a large and continuous energy demand on the heart. Aerobic activities such as walking, running, swimming and cycling should be intensive enough to raise and sustain your heartbeat to a target heart rate (THR) for at least 20-30 minutes. THR means your heart is working at 60-80 percent of its maximum capacity. For optimum benefits, you should exercise aerobically within your THR for at least 20-30 minutes a minimum of 3 times per week.

1997 Parlay International

Nutrition Notes

Since muscles can only store limited amounts of glycogen, carbohydrate loading (first depleting then loading up on carbohydrates) prior to strenuous activity is of questionable value. A better tactic is to slightly increase your normal carbohydrate intake for 2-3 days prior to the event, while slightly decreasing your activity level. Nutritionists recommend that 60 percent of our daily calories come from complex carbohydrates. However, endurance athletes may improve stamina by increasing complex carbohydrate intake to 70-80 percent of their daily intake. The best sources of complex carbohydrates are fresh fruits and vegetables and whole grain breads, cereals and pastas.

WORKING IT OUT

Often our actions lead to better things in the future. Your exercise today may mean a burst of energy when the next big project is due. Or it could give you unexpected creativity to solve a problem. A workout today is the building block for tomorrow's success.

If you don't like to fight the evening crowds, don't forget we offer exercise sessions from 7:00 - 7:45 a.m. every Monday, Wednesday and Friday!

Attention designers and artists! T-shirt Design Contest is coming up. The winner of the contest will be awarded $75. Only K-State students may submit a design. Contest rules are available in the Recreational Services office located on the main floor of the Recreational Complex. Entries are being accepted in the office now through Thursday, April 2.

Who's Who

Lisa Dethloff, native of Burr Oak, has been an Assistant Building Supervisor since January 1997. She always wanted to work for Recreational Services due to her love of all sports (especially volleyball) and because her parents were softball officials for Rec Services in the early 70's! Dethloff enjoys working with her peers and appreciates the experience gained in administering policy. Following graduation in May with a BS in political science, goals include attending graduate school, continuing education in law school, and employment in the legislature at state or federal level.

Ian Spurgeon came to K-State from Andover, KS to pursue his interest in military history. He discovered the Rec Complex as a great place to work out and also became involved in intramural sports. Spurgeon decided to apply for a job at the Rec last winter because of the atmosphere and staff and works in the service area and the weight/fitness room as an assistant building supervisor. Following graduation in May with a BA in History, Spurgeon plans to continue studying history (Civil War era), eventually completing his PhD somewhere on the East Coast.

Jeremy McFadden, Assistant Building Supervisor, enjoys his job at the Rec Complex because people come here to have fun, his co-workers are down-to-earth, and the facility is really super! McFadden said, "K-State did something right when it built the Peters Recreation Complex!" The challenging side of his job is dealing with all kinds of people and learning to be sensitive to their feelings when enforcing facility policies. McFadden graduates in May with a BS in accounting and plans to continue with graduate work. He hopes to eventually do auditing and tax work in the field of public accounting.

Pool Action

Dive into spring at the Natatorium! There's something for everyone at the pools. Swimmers and non-swimmers can enjoy aqua aerobics. Try our new Aqua Step Aerobics on Monday evenings at 8:30 p.m. We also offer aqua aerobics on Monday, Wednesday and Thursday at noon and Monday and Tuesday evenings at 7:30 p.m. Deep water jogging is offered on Wednesday evenings at 7:30 p.m.

Swimmers can condition in the 8-lane pool with backstroke flags, kick boards, pull buoys and hand paddles. Recreators can enjoy the 6-lane pool for water basketball, family swim or simply for fun! The diving well is available for diving and aqua jogging.

The Outdoor Rental Center is OPEN!

Hours of operation are Sunday through Friday, 4 - 6 p.m. and Saturday, 11 a.m. - 1 p.m. We have a complete line of camping equipment including canoes, tents, sleeping bags, stoves, lanterns, back packs and ice chests. If you are planning a camping trip, please check with us for your equipment needs. Reservations may be made two weeks in advance. Make your plans now for a great spring camping trip!

Free Blood Pressure Checks

Tuesday, April 28, 5-7 p.m.
Provided by Latene Health Center staff in the Wellness Resource Center at the Recreation Complex.
Blood pressure can also be checked any time a Rec Services' fitness consultant is available throughout the month.

Rec Check

Recreational Check provides program and facility information 24 hours a day by dialing 532-6000. Call Rec Check for Recreation Complex and Pool hours, exercise sessions, Intramural deadlines and more!

Lawsuit dismissed because of lack of evidence

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — In a legal victory for President Clinton, a federal judge Wednesday threw out Paula Jones' civil lawsuit, saying her evidence fell far short of proving sexual harassment.

"While the court will certainly agree that plaintiffs' allegations describe offensive conduct, the court... has found that the governor's alleged conduct does not constitute sexual assault," U.S. District Judge Susan Webber Wright said.

"The plaintiffs' allegations fall far short of the rigorous standards for establishing a claim of outrage under Arkansas law," she said in a 39 page decision.

President Clinton is pleased that he has received the vindication he has long awaited, said his chief spokesman, Mike McCurry, who was traveling with Clinton in Africa.

The Rutherford Institute, which has been paying the legal costs of Ms. Jones' suit against Clinton, said, "We will appeal this decision to the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals immediately and confidently seek redress for Jones' grievances for as long as is necessary, even to the Supreme Court of the United States."

An embattled White House immediately cheered the news, which comes more than three years after Jones first filed a lawsuit alleging Clinton made an unwanted sexual advance in a Little Rock, Ark. hotel room in 1991.

At the time, Clinton was Arkansas governor and Jones was a state work-

The president learned of the decision as he was winding up a 12-day trip.

He got a message to call his lawyer, Robert Bennett, and contacted him. Told the news, "He asked in fact if it was an April Fool's joke," said spokesman Mike McCurry.

"Obviously the president is pleased," McCurry said. He said Clinton shared the news with his wife, Hillary.

The Clinton's attorney, Robert Bennett, hailed Webber's ruling as a strong and powerful opinion.

Bennett had argued that Jones' case was motivated by politics and had failed to show she was harmed. "I think we were very strong on the facts and on the law," Bennett said outside his law offices.

While a significant victory, the White House was quick to note that the president still faces big hurdles, most notably the Whitewater prosecutors' criminal investigation in the Monica Lewinsky matter.

"This has been a fact of life and no doubt other things will remain a fact of life for him," McCurry said. He said Clinton had shown extraordinary discipline in not being distracted by the case.

Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., said he was not particularly surprised by the judge's ruling but said he did not think it would have any affect on the continuing investigation by Whitewater prosecutor Kenneth Starr.

"I think there has been pressure on him to get to a conclusion," Lott said, "but it's pretty hard for him to get to a conclusion when the White House won't submit facts or tell the truth."

Wright's ruling comes more than three years after Jones first went to court alleging Clinton, as Arkansas governor, made an unwanted sexual advance.

Clinton's lawyers had said that even if he had asked Jones for sex on May 8, 1991, at a Little Rock hotel room, the case against him was veneer-thin because there was no proof that she suffered in her state job, as she alleged.

Rottweilers' owner pleads guilty, gets 5 years of probation

JOHN HENDERSON
Kansas State Collegian

JUNCTION CITY — A Milford man whose three Rottweiler dogs mauled an 11-year-old boy to death last year is out on probation while his wife fights a 13-year prison sentence.

Jeffrey Davidson, 41, was charged with unintentional second-degree murder, but he agreed to plead guilty to lesser charges of involuntary manslaughter to stay out of prison. Davidson was sentenced Wednesday in Geary County District Court and was given an extended probation of five years.

The conditions of Davidson's probation include 100 hours of community service, remaining gainfully employed and not owning dogs during his probation. Provided he adheres to those conditions, Davidson can avoid serving 32 months in prison.

The charges against the Davidsons stemmed from the April 24, 1997, mauling of Christopher Wilson, a fifth-grader who was killed by three Rottweilers belonging to the Davidsons while he waited for a school bus with his younger brother, Trammel. All three dogs were later shot.

Davidson's attorney, Linda Barnes-Pointer, said Davidson accepted the plea agreement so someone could care for the couple's three children. Because the child endangerment charge was dropped in an agreement with prosecutors, Davidson likely will retain custody of the children.

Sabine Davidson, 27, Davidson's wife, was convicted in January of more serious charges of unintentional second-degree murder and endangering a child. She was released on bond pending an appeal. If the conviction stands, she will spend at least 10 years behind bars before she will be eligible for parole.

Geary County District Attorney Chris Biggs said the two were tried separately because of the details found in the investigation.

"His degree of culpability in my judgment was different than hers, based on the admissible evidence," Biggs said.

Both Davidsons were arrested by Geary County deputies and charged with involuntary manslaughter, but investigations later suggested the two should be charged with unintentional second-degree murder.

Biggs said there have been at least two other cases in America

Wefald disables e-mail, encourages visitations

JOSHUA STURGILL

President Jon Wefald's account with Computing and Network Services, pres@ksu.edu, has been closed, which means students no longer have access to the president through e-mail.

"At his request we disabled his account," said Ken Conrow, associate director of CNS.

The president's administrative assistant said Wefald still has an open-door policy, and the account was closed in an effort to encourage visits, letters and phone calls, which are more personal.

His office staff said the president's e-mail account was not used often, and the medium of e-mail sometimes made it difficult to understand and respond to messages.

"It was a personal decision to turn off my account. I prefer to receive a memo or a letter because people take more time to make their message clear," Wefald said.

Wefald also stressed that the closing of his e-mail account will not affect his availability.

"This is a 24-hours, seven-days-a-week, 365-days-a-year job, because my door is always open, and because I live on campus," he said.

Jeff Dougan, Student Senate chair, said he was not aware the account had been closed, because members of Student Governing Association know they can call or walk to Anderson Hall to see the president.

"I just go over to his office to make an appointment if I need to see him," Dougan said. "He is very accessible to students."

KS-WHO?

Manhattan's historic Prospect Point stands as symbol for K-State, community; 'U' missing because of high cost, new building codes.

TIM RICHARDSON
Kansas State Collegian

Horse-drawn wagons were used to carry the $350 of supplies up the slope of Prospect Point more than 75 years ago.

Today, only one thing stands in the way of its completion — about $100,000.

Tau Beta Pi, an honorary engineering organization, does maintenance to the hill each fall. Student president of Tau Beta Pi Troy Brin said it is unlikely that Prospect Point, better known as K-Hill, will ever have a 'U' to match the existing 'KS' in the near future.

Brin said he has heard estimates that as much as $200,000 might be needed to add the letter. Higher building code standards are one reason for the price increase.

"I think there are a lot better ways to spend money than to put a 'U' on a hill," he said.

In 1915, students in the College of Engineering planned to construct a 'K,' so the Civil Engineering Society put a 'K' in loose rock on Blumont Hill. It soon fell apart.

Engineering students at Kansas State Agricultural College later added a concrete 'K' to the current location in 1921, with hopes to construct the three additional letters in the future. Students marched to the hill from Agnewville led by a brass band. About 500 to 1,000 students assisted, using 210 sacks of concrete. The finished letter was 80 feet long, 60 feet wide and one foot deep.

Despite student desires to immediately add an 'S,' the letter was not constructed until 1930.

According to the Kansas Industrialist, rainy conditions caused a temporary delay around noon that stopped the pouring of concrete, but the workers shortly resumed construction. At a presentation ceremony, the chairman of the 'S' Committee "presented the letter to the college and future students, urging that it be properly cared for and maintained." The total cost for the 'S' was $500.

The university later changed its name to Kansas State College, prompting students to want a 'C' added.

But that never happened. "By the time they got around to it, the costs were prohibitive," Jeanne Mithen, librarian for the Riley County Historical Society, said. "The '30s were pretty lean with the Depression."

When the issue was discussed later in the 1960s, another letter would have cost about $10,000.

The university acquired K-Hill in 1980 after the land was deeded to the Kansas Board of Regents because Tau Beta Pi cannot own property.

The main priority of Tau Beta Pi concerning the hill is to repair the cracked "S," which is crumbling away.

"We've got people looking into it now," Brin said. "It's actually pretty bad."

Pledges to the organization must do maintenance work on the hill each fall. About 12 to 14 bags of white Portland cement and additional bags of lime are used to whitewash the letters. The organization also cuts down weeds and picks up trash around K-Hill.

"It's a prominent Manhattan landmark," he said. "If we weren't proud of it, we wouldn't continue with its upkeep."

Tau Beta Pi typically did its maintenance work following the K-State-KU football game, but strayed from the tradition

Apartment hunting to become efficient in Manhattan with World Wide Web site

Searching for an apartment has become easier in Manhattan. Will Baldwin and Ryan Morin have developed a World Wide Web database, FindaPad, which will help students and community members more efficiently hunt for apartments.

Baldwin and Morin, both system engineers with the K-State Department of Communications, see the need for this type of service in the Manhattan area.

FindaPad differs from other Web-based services because it focuses on the needs of consumers and landlords locally. Both Morin and Baldwin are former K-State students and have lived in the area for several years.

"Other sites out there list Manhattan as a suburb of Topeka," Morin said.

"What we provide is local knowledge. Living and working in the city, we feel we have the ability to make this service work for students."

FindaPad will be a great assistance to her organization's members, said Shirley Plumlee, treasurer of the Manhattan Landlords Association.

"It's a great idea," she said. "Landlords won't be bothered by calls about general information, like cost and size, and will be in contact with well-informed students."

Baldwin said FindaPad focuses on what students look for in an apartment.

"When you are searching for an apartment, there are several things that most people consider," Baldwin said. "Does the landlord allow pets or smoking? How far from campus is it? People using our service will be able to find answers to those questions without having to contact the landlord and find out that the apartment or house is not really what you are looking for."

Baldwin said the service is free for consumers, but will cost landlords $2 a day to have their property listed in the database. Similar services in larger areas charge the consumer to browse the apartment listings.

"We want to keep cost as low as possible but still run a first-class database," he said.

The site has added 25 new properties in the past week, and its administrators will be at the apartment fair today in the K-State Student Union giving live demonstrations.

"We are looking for feedback from students and other apartment hunters who have used, or who would be interested in, this service," Baldwin said. "We want to find the best design and the best platform for this service. Hopefully enough people will have heard of our service, and we can add more listings."

KU student dies near campus after falling in crosswalk, being struck by automobile

LAWRENCE — A University of Kansas student was struck by a vehicle and killed as she crossed a residential street near campus.

Lisa Rosel, 18, of Overland Park, Kan., was walking with friends just before midnight Tuesday when she slipped and fell into the path of a sport-utility vehicle, Police Sgt. George Wheeler said.

Witnesses said the driver had a green light and tried to stop when he saw the pedestrians in the road, Wheeler said.

Senate fails to pass bill that would limit school's access to Internet pornography

TOPEKA — Imagine teen-age boys using the computers in their junior high school library to surf to pornographic sites on the Internet, then download images of naked women.

It happened recently in Fowler, causing the state senator who lives in the small southwest Kansas town to draft a proposal designed to limit minors' access to Internet smut with state-financed computer terminals.

But Sen. Tim Huelskamp, a conservative Republican, failed Wednesday to convince enough of his colleagues to support his proposal as an amendment to a proposed $8.5 billion state budget. The vote on his amendment was 15-24.

Some senators questioned whether Huelskamp's proposal was practical. Others said the job of policing Internet use should be left to local school and library officials.

"To think that we're going to have any practical impact is ridiculous," said Sen. Christine Downey, D-Newton. "Most of these kids don't need to go to a library to use the Internet. They have computers in their homes."

Huelskamp and other conservative senators sponsored a bill that would prevent libraries, schools, universities, community colleges, vocational-technical schools from using state funds to provide Internet access unless they took steps to prevent minors from accessing pornographic sites.

The institutions would have to have a written Internet policy and could satisfy the requirement by putting special filtering software on their computers.

The Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee heard testimony on the bill, including from an anti-pornography advocate who gave legislators a list of pornographic sites, including one featuring pictures of lusty housewives and their "boy toys."

But the committee also heard criticism from library and school officials, as well as the American Civil Liberties Union.

Huelskamp's amendment to the budget bill would have prevented institutions from spending any state funds if it not meet the requirements for blocking minors' access to Internet smut.

"It's not extreme to want to protect our children," Huelskamp said.

NATIONAL NEWS

Tobacco ad restrictions frustrates Camel; company forced to remove packaging label

NEW YORK — First Joe Camel — now Old Joe?

The leading tobacco bill in Congress would force Old Joe, the Barnum & Bailey dromedary on Camel cigarette packs since 1913, to join cartoon counterpart Joe Camel in retirement.

In June, tobacco companies agreed in a pact with state attorneys general to accept a ban on cartoons and people in its advertisements.

But the bill by Senate Commerce Committee Chairman John McCain would ban not only Joe Camel and the Marlboro man, but animals as well.

And the ban would apply to product packaging. That's angering Camel maker RJR Nabisco, whose lawyers confirmed Tuesday that the ban would erase Old Joe from Camel labels.

"The name of the brand is Camel. That's been its name since 1913, and for 85 years it has had a camel on the package front," RJR Nabisco spokeswoman Peg Carter said. "This is simply one of the reasons why this industry has indicated it will not sign away its First Amendment rights with the McCain bill."

Camel has used the same picture on its packs since a pack of 20 sold for a dime. Lithographers based the picture on a photograph a company photographer shot of Barnum & Bailey circus camel Old Joe. The shot was taken with the animal in an unusual pose, with its nose and tail held high, because Old Joe's trainer had just whacked him on the nose for misbehaving.

Banning Old Joe would present advertisers with an unusual problem. Merrill Lynch analyst Alan Kaplan said, "How do you run a Camel ad without a camel?"

If cigarette makers make good on their threats, RJR Nabisco might not have to.

The industry Tuesday threatened it would not sign the voluntary ban on cartoons and people if Congress passes the McCain bill, which cigarette makers contend is unconstitutional.

Without the prohibition, RJR Nabisco would be free to bring back Joe Camel from voluntary retirement. The pool-playing, shades-wearing cartoon character appeared in ads as irresistible to women — and in real life, critics say, drew young children to smoking.

Analysts, however, wonder if RJR Nabisco would be willing to incur the wrath of antismoking advocates by disintering the desert creature.

"From a public relations point of view, it would be very unpopular for the industry to do that," Kaplan said.

"But the way the fight is going on right now, it looks like everybody is starting to stand up and put up their fists."

Fee increase to tap reserves

STUDENTS' FEE LEVELS WON'T INCREASE TO FUND CAMPUS BUDGET GROWTH.

NATE JENKINS
Kansas State Collegian

Next year's student privilege fees will increase by about $34,000 overall, but the money probably won't come from higher charges on students' tuition bills.

If a recommendation from Privilege Fee Committee is approved by President Jon Wefald and the Kansas Board of Regents, the additional money will come from slowing the growth rate of privilege fee reserve accounts and tapping into surplus money.

Credit hour fees would remain the same, with a full-time student paying $251. Student Senate Chair Jeff Dougan and Privilege Fee Committee Chair

Aaron Otto, who wrote the recommendation, said they expect it to meet approval from Wefald and the regents.

Otto said the $34,000 increase is minuscule compared with the $4,507,737 in fee money that his committee reviewed this year. He said using surplus money next year shouldn't dent the reserve account significantly.

"The organizations that wanted more money got more, and the places that wanted to keep fees down got their wish as well," Otto said. "Last year we had $98,000 in reserve money, and this year we should easily move that amount up to $215,000."

"Plus, if only 60 more students enroll next year, that will make up next year's fee increase," he said.

The reserve accounts are mainly for security against emergencies and potential enrollment decreases.

University Controller Keith Ratzloff said all excess money that comes from privilege fees goes directly into the reserve accounts and is used only to overcome shortfalls, not to provide campus entities with more funding than their budgets request.

Dougan said it is fiscally wise to have a reserve account, and the recommendation to fund the increase in student fees by slowing the growth rate of reserve accounts already has been accepted by Vice President for Administration and Finance Tom Rawson.

Of the nine budgets reviewed by the Privilege Fee Committee, four will receive more funding next year than they did this year. Student Health Services will receive the biggest increase, $99,556.

The Intercollegiate Athletic Council received the largest cut in student fee money, $147,215.

Mann, Macklin to fill cabinet positions

ANDREW WIMMER
Kansas State Collegian

The sun will set on Student Body President Tim Riemann and Vice President Jennafer Neufeld's term today, and Tracey Mann and Andy Macklin will take over the reins during tonight's Student Senate meeting.

Mann and Macklin will begin their terms as president and vice president after their inauguration tonight, and both said they plan to hit the ground running.

"We have a lot of things we want to get accomplished before summer break," Macklin, junior in mechanical engineering, said. "We are going to be real busy here in the next two months."

Mann and Macklin said their first order of business would be to fill cabinet and university committee positions.

Macklin said there are between 50 and 100 opportunities for students to become involved in student government through executive appointments.

"The committees are a great way for students to get involved," Macklin said. "Committees range from athletic ticket sales to judiciary committees. We are looking for students who are eager to contribute to the university."

Mann, junior in political science and agricultural economics, said he hopes to fill all the positions by the time school ends for summer break.

"It's going to take a lot of time to sift through all the applications," he said. "Both Andy and I don't want to do anything halfway."

Mann said he also plans to work toward establishing a Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex parking permit during the first months of his term.

"Our hope is to have the pass ready for the fall semester," Mann said. "We just need to communicate with Parking Services and let them know how much students want and need this pass."

Macklin said he is unsure about the best way to accomplish getting the parking permit, but he and Mann have several ideas on how to attack the issue.

"We haven't decided how we want to go about getting the pass approved," he said. "Whether it's writing letters or sitting down with Parking Services, we feel we can get this done for students."

Creating a bookswap system is another area that Mann and Macklin said they will begin work on.

Mann said he hopes to have an Internet site where students can find and trade textbooks up and running by winter break.

"What we need to find is someone who knows how to set up a program like the bookswap," Mann said.

"Once we find that person, it should not take that much time to get it up and running."

And if filling their cabinet, working on Rec Complex parking permits and establishing the bookswap isn't enough, Mann said he and Macklin plan to attack another part of their campaign platform — advising.

Mann said by next spring, he hopes students will be able to see a difference in K-State's advising program.

"Getting the parties together and starting dialogue is what we want to get accomplished early in our term," Mann said. "This is something that will not get done overnight. It's one of those things where we will see the fruit of our labors next spring."

"It gives us an issue to focus on throughout our term," he said.

Macklin said there will be a cabinet position solely dealing with advising, but the two said they have no concrete plans about how to change the system.

"It is going to take a lot of cooperation to get this done," Macklin said. "All parties will have to work together if we are going to approve the system."

Mann said he will take his position seriously, devoting much of his time to his duties as president.

"I'm going to take a smaller course load next semester," Mann said.

"I'm committed to serve the students with all of my energy."

President Wefald should continue e-mail account

Until recently, President Jon Wefald's open-door policy meant a willingness to meet with students and concerned members of the campus community, including in cyberspace.

Citing his dislike for electronic correspondence and too many useless or non-germane messages, Wefald chose to terminate his pres@ksu.edu campus e-mail account.

Truthfully, Wefald is an extremely accessible university president. His open-door policy is something he has made a priority, whether he finds time to meet with students between meetings or returns phone calls quickly. Wefald is also a visible presence at K-State events and often can be seen around campus.

However, e-mail provided students an easy and efficient way to communicate with their president. Students could drop Wefald a note to ask questions about campus construction, express an opinion about a university policy or solicit feedback about a campus event.

E-mail is more than an opportunity for students to sound off. It's a chance for students to have a quick and immediate audience with their university president.

Some students initially might feel too intimidated to call or stop by the office of the president in Anderson Hall even if there isn't a reason to be, and e-mail gives them another option.

Furthermore, all students have access to an e-mail account when they enroll at K-State, and Wefald has often hailed this university as one of the most-wired campuses in the nation. It's bad form for the president to turn off his account and limit one form of access to communicate with the campus community.

The e-mail account can easily be used as a clearinghouse for student opinions and offer Wefald another avenue to stay in touch with the pulse of this campus.

Although Wefald has the right to terminate his e-mail account, this forum provides him with an additional opportunity to keep up with the issues and concerns of this campus community.

ULTIMATE MATCH BETWEEN SELF-RIGHTEOUS AND COMMON SENSE

Announcer: Helloooooooooo Wrestling Fans! Are you ready? Then let's get ready to RUMBLE! In the near corner, wearing green and gold trunks, I have the long-winded, self-righteous delight of Cheesheads everywhere, Reggie White! And in the far corner, wearing red, white and blue trunks, I have the hulking behemoth, the mother of all fears, the minister of mayhem, the curse of the ages, Common Sense! Tonight's match will be a one-fall contest, with no time limit!

Referee: All right men, you know the rules — no holds barred, but try not to splash any blood on the ladies in the front row.

PAUL ROBBERN
Paul is a senior in chemistry and biochemistry. You can send e-mail to Paul at vladi@ksu.edu.

(Bell rings)

Reggie: I'm going to get you sucker! I'm going to tear you apart, limb by limb, and then tear up a turnbuckle like George "The Animal" Steele used to and make you eat the stuffing! (slaps chest/strikes opponent)

Common Sense: Oh yeah? The American public won't be so easily satiated, let alone the Wisconsin Legislature! We aren't buying your rationalizations (dodges/initiates Irish Whip) for your offensive, racist views.

RW: Rationalizations? They tried to play word games with Jesus — see, you're at it again! I'm just standing up for the Lord — and you're trying to bring me down for it. My agent, G. Booke, said you'd try this sort of thing. (gets caught by clothesline)

CS: Will it never end? I don't give a damn who you are or what religion you belong to. You said some mighty offensive things, and it's time you 'fessed up to it. (two leg drops to chest, climbs to top rope)

RW: (stands) I don't have to take this. I do community service, despite earning millions each year. (Grabs CS from top rope, body slams to center of mat) I even let my mother star with me in those corny Campbell's soup commercials. (elbow drop/CS rolls to evade elbow drop by RW)

Announcer: Ouch, he came knockin' but no one was home!

CS: Even so, all your bantering about God on and off the field doesn't make you infallible! Why don't you let that higher power worry about the homosexuals and the "virtues" of the different races? (headlocks RW/begins pummeling RW)

Announcer: Now Common Sense came knockin', but no one was home in the White House. (guffaw for effect)

CS: Besides, every time the Pack wins, do you really think it was because God was on your side? (one final shot to head)

RW: How else can you explain it? (falls to mat)

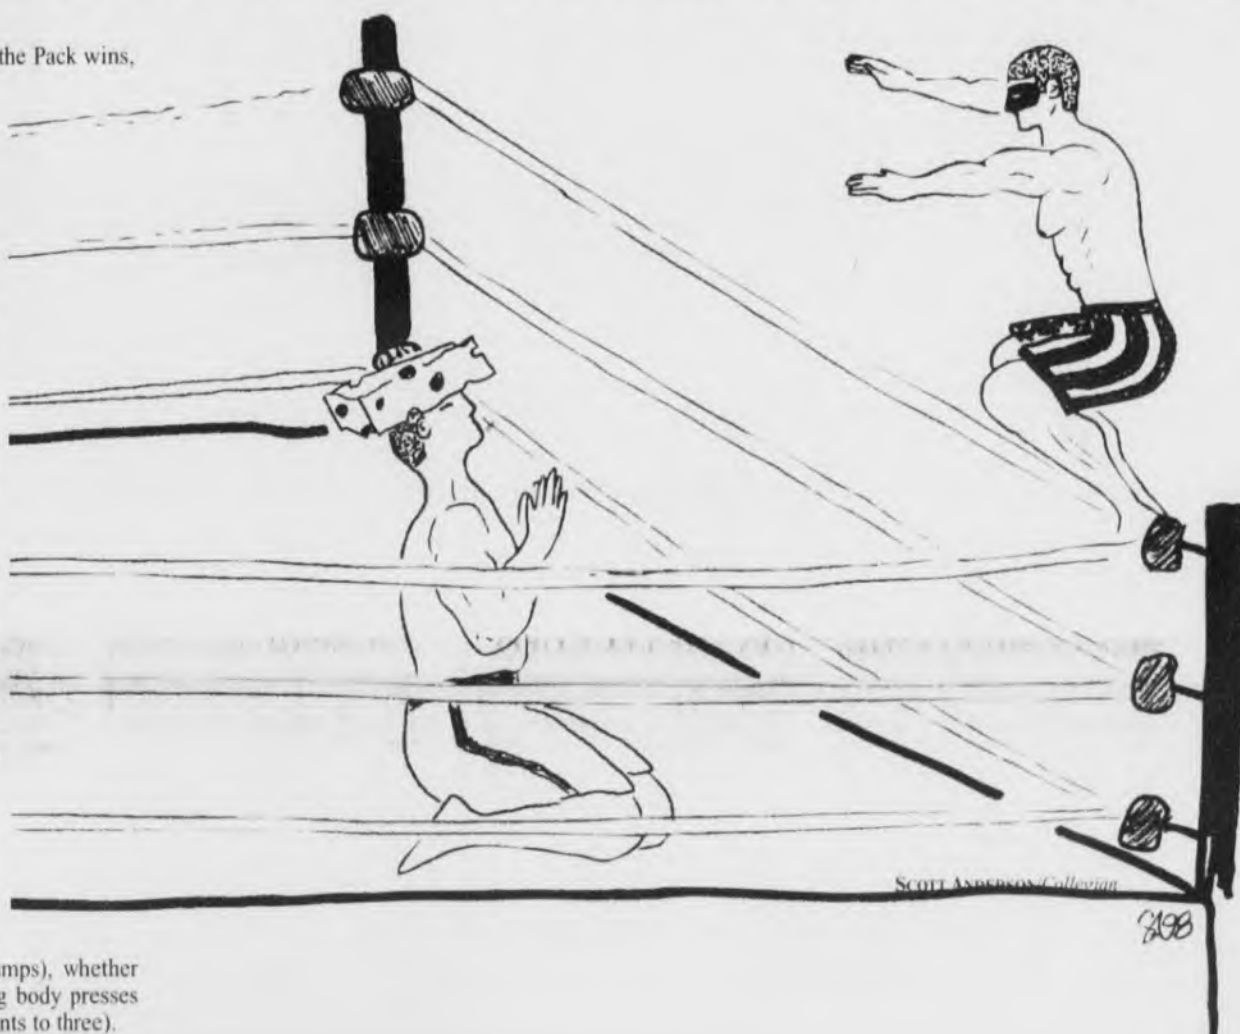

CS: Maybe your team just played better that day? (propels self off of ropes)

RW: (fights to stand) But I'm an ordained minister. I've got what you might call a "hotline" to the Big Man!

CS: Who, Gilbert Brown? If you win because "the Big Man" wanted you to, does that mean he liked you better than he liked the other team? (connects on drop-kick) We're not buying it, Reggie. (climbs to top rope)

RW: I know what I said, but I was just preaching the truth. (stands)

CS: Problem is, that's a mighty subjective thing (jumps), whether you want to admit it (flying body presses RW to mat) or not. (Ref counts to three).

Families are not all that they are cracked up to be

Not to start this off on an Andy Rooney-esque note, but have you ever noticed how much accolade and general praise is given to the family unit? I personally have not had a lot of experience with a family of my own — holidays usually consisted of Mom stuffing a turkey into the microwave, then we'd gather around the television for heart-warming movies about other peoples' families on the USA Network. Because the family lives in far-thrown reaches of this nation and Canada, we saw no alternative to our humble holiday festivities.

The bulk of my tiny kith — your standard aunt, uncle, two cousins and grandma package — call Florida home. Having not seen any of them since my high school graduation in 1996, I thought perhaps my spring break time would be well spent on a nice, wholesome visit with them.

Now, I've never understood the whole "blood is thicker than water" saying, but I get the gist of it, and I think the saying, cute as it might be, is wrong.

This realization began when Grandma and I went to my aunt and uncle's house for my cousin Hope's fourth birthday party. The last time I saw my cousins, Hope was 2 and her brother, Zach, was 5. Zach thought I was a god, and Hope was just happy running around naked.

Of course, things have changed. Hope, fully clothed, politely dodged Grandma and me, and Zach had to be prodded to say hello. But just because they have outgrown their silly (but I have to admit, kind of cool) adoration for me, naturally doesn't mean I love them any less. And I was probably feeling just as shy as they felt.

As more people filtered into the house — all of whom I did not know — I began to feel more like a stranger than a member of my own family. Hope opened her mountain of presents — a seemingly endless parade of Barbies and My Little Ponies — with glee. I was feeling proud of the gift I got her —

BRANDI HERTIG
Brandi is a junior in print journalism. You can send e-mail to Brandi at blh0377@ksu.edu.

"Veggie Tales: Dave and the Giant Pickle." Nice and Christian, with talking vegetables and sheep that fall over to boot. She opened it and said, "Oh, I saw this at school," and handed it to her mother. She's just a little kid, and frankly, my budget just cannot compete with Olympic Skater Barbie and Rugrats underwear. The next day my aunt called and said the kids had watched the video about a thousand times, and she was ready to kill me. Admittedly, this made me feel a little better about my standing in the family.

But then I talked to my boyfriend, Toban, who happened to be babysitting his niece and nephew. He gave the phone to Jade, who chatted for a while about falling on her way to the mailbox. Before she gave the phone back to Toban, she said, "I love you, Brandi." Now, she's only 2, and no one prompted her to tell me that. My cousins have never said "I love you" to me without a mom or dad whispering in the background, "C'mon, tell Cousin Brandi you love her."

But here was this little girl, who is technically no relation of my own, doing something the little people in my family cannot do on their own.

While I said I personally have had no experience with a family of my own, I have had a lot of experience with families that are not my own. The traditional definition of the word doesn't seem to work in my case. Families are not all that they're cracked up to be — something most of us realized as soon as we could understand what was going on around us. Genetics tie us to people we might not otherwise spend time with. I do love my family, and not out of any sense of obligation.

However, it's something else altogether that brings people together who share everything except relatives.

READERSwrite

Reader concerned about nonexistent softball program

Editor,

I am writing as a student concerned about the women's softball program here at K-State. You are probably wondering, what program? That is my concern. K-State does not have a softball program and is falling behind in the Big 12.

For more than a decade now, K-State has been lacking in the softball area. Besides Colorado, K-State is the only other team in the Big 12 without a varsity softball team. Obviously, this does not seem to bother the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics xtoo much. It makes sense that Colorado does not have a team, as it would be difficult to play in the snow. But what is K-State's reason? Too much open space?

Come on. Instead, we decided to catch up with the Title IX issue by adding a rowing team. A lot of good that does us in the middle of the United States. There are community colleges all over Kansas that are playing more sports than K-State is. It would be too bad if K-State lost some excellent athletes to a community college because it didn't have that particular sport.

I know money is a major issue with the whole softball situation, but I think the athletic department is trying to pay for too much. The club softball team at K-State already has the equipment needed to play. It's not as if we are going to have to build a whole new complex. There are fields in Manhattan that would be willing to let us rent from them.

The only significant expenses would be coaches' salaries, scholarships and traveling costs, and these expenses come right along with any other sport. Not to nap on rowing, but how convenient was it for K-State to come up with shell and vehicles to transport them?

Right now, there are high school girls sending in recruitment letters to play softball for K-State from all over the country. Little do they know that K-State does not even have a softball team, and who knows if it ever will in the future. I find this is a little embarrassing, and I hope you do, too. I think the athletic department needs to focus more on what's best for K-State right now, rather than what's cheapest.

Reader turned off by format change, wants old music

Editor,

Since KSDB-FM 91.9 went through its format change last summer, the radio station went from being a halfway decent progressive college station (at least during weekdays) to a station that now plays mostly crap. This is not only my opinion, but the opinion of most everybody I talk to. The only show that I truly enjoy is the one that plays African music on Sunday afternoons.

As one of my friends said with regard to the African show, "It's nice to hear something that's different from the banal garbage that's usually played on the radio."

The point being, in addition to African music, I personally would like to hear Indian music on the radio for a change. DB92 should at least give a couple of hours to Indian music on Sundays, maybe before the reggae show, or better yet, all Saturday afternoon instead of that unbearable mundane trash the station normally plays. Also, there's a sizable Indian community in Manhattan that would listen.

Reader disagrees with viewpoint about architecture

Editor,

I am writing in response to the article by Russell Fortmeyer in Wednesday's issue of the Collegian.

I'm just really curious as to why you feel it is important to tear down — literally and figuratively — every building on campus that doesn't meet your gloriously high standards of architectural aesthetics. Why do you think your critiques are so valuable that you must take up a third of a page with them? You say Anderson Hall doesn't "speak" to this generation. What the heck does that mean? Is it supposed to? Will we be unable to get an education if it doesn't?

K-State isn't obligated to tear down buildings and redesign them to please every generation of architecture majors. Considering that we all know that money must be spent wisely, it would certainly be a waste unless changes definitely were needed. There's nothing wrong with K-State retaining the look of a past era, and who cares if it's not to everyone's taste?

And why do you seem to believe you're such the expert everyone is waiting with bated breath to hear? While I certainly hope K-State has given you a good education, that certainly does not make you Manhattan's resident expert of K-State architecture. I'm quite certain there are few others, if any, that would base their opinion of K-State solely on Anderson Hall.

I hope you are graduating soon, for I would be interested to see if anyone beyond your fellow students would put any stock in what you have to say.

Beauty pageants focus on looks, not healthiness

Editor,

I couldn't decide whether to laugh or cry when I read Micah Unruh's defense of beauty pageants. He wrote that the purpose of the swimsuit competition is to evaluate the health and fitness of the candidates because the winner must be able stand up to a demanding year of travel and appearances.

He must be the only person in the world who accepts that explanation. If there is genuine concern about health and fitness of candidates, why don't physicians simply give them physical examinations?

A beauty pageant is a beauty pageant is a beauty pageant. If a beauty pageant were not about beauty, it wouldn't be called a beauty pageant.

He also wrote that a pageant "puts women on a pedestal and allows them a moment to shine... a chance to speak their minds."

Only a man who has never been on a pedestal, and certainly not while wearing high heels, would make such a statement. Pedestals are confining and uncomfortable. Any woman on a pedestal is too scared to do much of anything except concentrate on not falling. Maybe that's the reason some of the contestants make such bland statements.

I'll believe that beauty pageants are not meat markets when a homely woman who also uses a wheelchair is crowned Miss America.

Graduate finds Peace Corps rewarding

JOSHUA STURGILL
Kansas State Collegian

K-State graduate Rinav "Reno" Mehta said he finds his work as a "sanitation engineer" both challenging and rewarding.

Mehta, who graduated in May 1997 with a degree in civil engineering, said he has been able to utilize his degree while on assignment with the Peace Corps in Jamaica.

"I am literally a 'Sanitation Engineer,'" he said. "I work on water/waste treatment and hygiene education at the national level."

Of the 100 Corps volunteers in Jamaica, Mehta said most have rural assignments, but his job with the Jamaican government in Kingston is an exception.

"The government can't afford to hire engineers," he said. "So the work that the Peace Corps does is very important."

Mehta is seven months into his two-year assignment with the Corps and was on a brief leave to visit friends in Manhattan and his family in Overland Park. He said the short vacation has given him time to reflect on the unique services he is able to provide for the people of Jamaica.

"Right now, I'm building a sewage treatment plant for a hospital. They give me a monthly allowance for expenses and provide for my housing, but it comes out to about $11 a day," he said.

"I guess I'm used to it, though. I'm living like a poor college student."

He also is working with a health center, a high school and six primary schools on a second project north of Kingston.

"The Peace Corps promotes community work and being part of the community," he said. "I'm working to raise money for the health center and helping to paint it."

Mehta said the goal of his work is to find solutions local people can continue to maintain after he leaves.

"It's what they call 'sustainability.' I help the locals to realize the problem, and then I work with them to make it their project. So at the health center, they weren't helping me finish my project, I was helping them. The goal is for the locals to continue after you're gone."

At the high school, Mehta said he works on a tree-planting program that uses recycled waste from a sewage treatment plant as fertilizer.

At one primary school, a rainwater collection tank is contaminated by crows on the roof of the building.

"My job is to find a way to scare them away without using any electricity," he said.

Mehta said these projects have given him a chance to gain experience and use his degree creatively.

"You're given bizarre situations, and you have to find a solution that is affordable, practical and will work," he said.

Reflecting back on the application process, Mehta said Jamaica was not necessarily his first choice.

"When people think of the Peace Corps, they think Africa," he said. "I think all I put on the application for a preference was 'someplace warm' but not speaking another language limited my choices."

Mehta said that while he was working through the application process, setting up appointments, securing recommendations and waiting for replies, his friends were busy planning careers.

"My friends were all applying to grad schools and getting jobs, but I knew this was what I wanted to do," he said. "I had a lot of support from my friends. They knew I liked the Peace Corps."

Mehta said his parents were more concerned.

"My parents didn't like the idea, but they realized I was serious," he said. "Their goal for me was graduation. I graduated. They respected my decision, but I don't think they really understood at the time why I wanted to give up two years of my life."

Mehta said his years with the Peace Corps will not be wasted.

"Having hot water, sending kids to college — what we take for granted, most of the world is struggling for. I feel that I've grown, and I'm glad I made the decision," he said.

"No doubt I've had bad days, and sometimes it feels like an emotional roller coaster. This is a developing country, and there are people without safe water, without proper sanitation and children without schools."

Former Buffalo football player escapes work-release program

BOULDER, Colo. — Former University of Colorado football player Damon Dickey, who pleaded guilty to trespass, assault and criminal mischief in last May's University Hill riots, has walked away from his work-release program.

A warrant has been issued for his arrest on charges of felony escape.

"I was surprised," said Jeff Goetz, Boulder County Jail work-release supervisor. "He'd been doing pretty good up until he took off, actually."

After being extradited from San Diego, Dickey, 20, pleaded guilty last December to a felony charge of first-degree criminal trespassing and misdemeanor charges of third-degree assault and criminal mischief.

Boulder District Court Judge Joseph Bellipanni sentenced Dickey in January to nine months in jail and four years probation for the May 2 incident. Bellipanni agreed to place Dickey in the work release program.

Last May's riots on the University Hill spanned three days, injuring several police officers and dozens of others. They caused hundreds of thousands of dollars in property damage.

If captured, Dickey could be sent back to work-release or sentenced to straight time in jail, Goetz said.

BASEBALL ROUNDUP

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Blue Jays 3, Twins 2

TORONTO — Roger Clemens, coming off his fourth AL Cy Young Award, allowed only two hits in seven innings in pitching the Toronto Blue Jays past the Minnesota Twins 3-2 Wednesday night in a season opener.

A crowd of 41,387 saw Tim Lincecum win in his first game as a major league manager.

Jose Cruz Jr. hit a two-run homer in the second inning and an RBI triple in the fifth, and also singled. Randy Myers, Toronto's top off-season acquisition, pitched a scoreless ninth for a save.

Clemens, who won 21 games last year, gave up a seeing-eye single by Pat Meares and a double by Paul Molitor. He permitted one run, struck out three and walked three.

Johnson got his first glimpse at his bullpen tandem — Kelvin Escobar in the eighth, Myers in the ninth.

Escobar gave up a home run to Brent Gates that trimmed the Toronto lead to 3-2. Myers didn't give up any runs, but was helped when Cruz made a fine running catch on one play, and then survived a long foul ball into the second deck by Pat Meares before getting him on a grounder.

Devil Rays 11, Tigers 8

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — The expansion Devil Rays earned their first victory in team history, getting four RBIs from Fred McGriff.

He doubled home a run in the first inning, added an RBI single in a four-run fourth and capped the night with a two-run single in the eighth as Tampa Bay rebounded from an opening-day 11-6 loss to the Tigers.

Cuban defector Rolando Arrojo, making his major league debut, worked six innings for the win, allowing four runs on eight hits. The 29-year-old right-hander struck out six, walked one, and his throwing error allowed a Tigers' run in the first.

Detroit starter Brian Moehler lasted 3 2-3 innings and was tagged for six runs and 10 hits. The Devil Rays collected 18 hits against six Detroit pitchers.

Padres 10, Reds 9

CINCINNATI — Joey Hamilton's rough start left San Diego down by five runs, but Greg Myers' bases-loaded double rallied the Padres to a 10-9 victory Wednesday night over the Cincinnati Reds.

San Diego improved to 2-0 by pulling off a comeback that featured homers by Ken Caminiti and Steve Finley and a seven-run sixth inning highlighted by Myers' go-ahead double.

Finley drove in four runs overall as the Padres scored 10 for the second straight game. San Diego won the opener 10-2, the Reds' worst opening-day defeat in 36 years.

The first two days of the season have been trouble for the Reds. Cincinnati fell to 0-2, and owner Marge Schott fell at home and broke her hip.

Cubs 10, Marlins 3

MIAMI — Mark Clark struck out 11 in seven innings, and Kevin Orie drove in four runs — both career-highs — as Chicago earned its first victory.

Last season, the Cubs lost their first 14 games, a National League record. They broke a seven-game losing streak in Miami dating back to 1996.

Clark allowed four hits and one run in seven innings. He improved to 5-1 lifetime against Florida with an ERA of 2.59.

Orie had RBIs on with a single in the first, a double in the third, a homer off the left-field foul pole in the fifth and a scoring fly in the ninth.

Pirates 4, Expos 0

MONTREAL — Francisco Cordova and two relievers combined on a five-hitter, and Pittsburgh shut down Montreal in the season opener for both.

Tony Womack's two-run double highlighted a three-run seventh against loser Carlos Perez.

A crowd of 31,220 saw the Expos do little until the ninth inning, when they loaded the bases with two outs against reliever Rich Loiselle. Scott Livingstone hit a routine fly for the final out.

Royals winning streak ends after 1 game

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BALTIMORE — The Baltimore Orioles bounced back from a rocky opening-day performance by reaching several milestones in a rout of the Kansas City Royals.

Cal Ripken hit his eighth career grand slam. Scott Erickson earned his 100th career win and Lenny Webster enjoyed his first two-homer game in the majors Wednesday night as Baltimore coasted to a 10-1 victory.

Ray Miller's first win as manager of the Orioles was particularly sweet because it followed a 4-1 loss to the Royals in the season opener Tuesday.

"Lenny's two home runs, Scotty's 100th and my first. That's real nice," Miller said. "Joe Carter told me before the game, 'Why don't you sit back and relax tonight? We'll make it easy for you.'"

The Orioles did just that. Ripken's grand slam capped a five-run first inning that enabled Baltimore to blow past a Kansas City team looking to go 2-0 for the first time since 1979.

"They came out with a little kill in their eyes today. They sent a message," Royals manager Tony Muser said.

Baltimore also got a solo homer from Jeffrey Hammonds, but all that offense wasn't really needed because Erickson was extremely sharp in his 31st career complete game.

The right-hander allowed four hits, struck out five and walked one to improve his major league record to 100-83. The sinkerballer got 18 ground-ball outs, and the only run against him came on a homer by Dean Palmer in the second.

Erickson didn't know about win No. 100 until after the game.

"I forgot all about it," he said. "I guess it means you've been around a while and established yourself as halfway decent. It's nice, but it wasn't a goal tonight."

Webster, his batterymate, wasn't looking to hit two home runs, either. Webster has been struggling with an inflamed right elbow and was concerned about whether he could get the ball out of the infield.

"I was more or less worried about my timing at the plate," he said.

"I thought I might be in front of the breaking balls, but it seemed everything just clicked tonight."

Baltimore wasted little time against Royals left-hander Glendon Rusch. Singles by Roberto Alomar, Eric Davis and Rafael Palmeiro produced a run before Carter beat out a dribbler to load the bases for Ripken, who drove a 1-1 changeup into the left-field seats.

The homer pushed Ripken ahead of Boog Powell into sole possession of second place on the team's career list of grand slams. It was his 371st home run, pushing him past Gil Hodges into 40th place on baseball's career list.

"Cal Ripken has been around a long time. It's obvious that he can't turn on a quality major league fastball," Muser said. "So I don't see the sense in throwing him a changeup and speeding his bat up."

Hammonds led off the fourth by hitting an 0-2 pitch over the wall in center, and Webster followed with a shot to left for a 7-1 lead. Rusch was charged with seven runs and nine hits in four-plus innings.

A pair of Kansas City errors enabled the Orioles to score two unearned runs in the sixth.

Webster, who had three hits, homered in the eighth off Brian Bevil. The catcher was just as pleased with Erickson's 100th win as he was his first two-homer game.

"I'm very happy for the both of us," he said. "We've worked so well together in the past, and tonight was no different."

Miller, who took over for Davey Johnson in November, last won a game as a major-league manager in 1986 with the Minnesota Twins. He then served as a pitching coach for 11 years before being hired to manage the Orioles.

"It felt good," he said. "But when you manage, you can't enjoy anything for too long."

NO LAUGHING MATTER

KU's tennis team didn't take an April Fool's Day attitude to the court in an 8-1 victory against K-State

The K-State women's tennis team was wishing the final score from its meet with Kansas on Wednesday was just a cruel April Fool's joke.

However, the 8-1 loss dealt to the Wildcats by the Jayhawks was not a joke. The No. 15 Jayhawks, led by four nationally ranked players, upended the Cats at the L. P. Washburn Recreational Area tennis courts near the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

The lone victory for the Cats came at No. 5 singles, where Dinah Watson beat Hawk Julia Sidorova 6-2, 6-2.

"I thought I played well," Watson said. "It was probably the best I've played this year, actually."

The coaching staff agreed with Watson's assessment of her own play.

"Dinah was playing really well," assistant coach Robert Novotny said.

The Cats did have some close matches at other positions in the lineup.

At both No. 2 and No. 3 singles, the Cats took their opponents to three sets.

In the second position, Anna Pampoulova lost to KU's Christie Sim 6-2, 0-6, 7-6 (7-5).

At No. 3, Martina Pospisilova was beaten by KU's Kris Sell, the No. 111 player in the country, 7-5, 5-7, 6-4.

"We saw some definite improvement from last week," Coach Steve Bietau said.

"Most notably would be the play of Anna and Martina."

The Cats also played well at the No. 2 and No. 3 doubles positions.

"Our two and three doubles played much better in those positions than we have so far," Bietau said.

However, both teams still dropped their matches by the score of 8-6.

The weather conditions also played a part in the matches. Novotny said the wind affected Dorodnova by not allowing her to utilize her serve-and-volley style.

But the wind was not a problem for everyone. Watson thrived under the outdoor conditions.

"The conditions today actually favored (Watson) a little bit," Novotny said. "She likes to play outside rather than inside."

The Cats' showing was hurt by injuries. Dorodnova played with a slight ankle injury. Lena Pilipchak was forced to sit out of singles play with a muscle strain in her back. She did join with Dorodnova to play No. 1 doubles, though.

"She hasn't practiced this week, and it is kind of a day-by-day thing," Bietau said. "We've got a lot of matches coming up and decided to gamble in a pretty conservative way."

The Cats had hoped for a better showing but said they realized they played well against a tough opponent.

"It's kind of disappointing," Watson said. "KU is a very good team, but we had hoped to get more than one game."

WAC to receive props from Alliance with automatic bowl bid in '98

Break out the champagne.

No, not for Kentucky — their fountains probably have run dry by now.

Brigham Young University finally won.

Yes, the Cougars won the 1996 Cotton Bowl, but with the Cougars' almost-sterling 13-1 record, BYU was convinced it didn't belong at the Cotton Bowl in the first place.

BYU deserved an Alliance bid. The team was No. 5 in the nation. The Western Athletic Conference gets no respect.

Apparently, the Alliance's ears are attuned to whining. Starting in 1998, if a WAC team is ranked in the top six, it will automatically qualify for one of the Alliance's two at-large bids.

Not only that, but the perennial football powerhouse conference, Conference USA, was offered the same deal. You know, the conference where only three of its seven teams posted winning records last season. That powerhouse.

Remember in the old-old system, the three bowls in question were the Orange, Sugar and Fiesta Bowls? The bowls automatically invited the champions of the Southeastern Conference, the Big East, the Atlantic Coast Conference and the Big 12 to the party, leaving two at-large bids.

Now, with the old-new system, the Rose Bowl is added to the mix, along with the Pacific-10 and the Big 10. How much more confusing can this thing get? True, the conference champions usually fall within the top six anyway (with exceptions, such as the Wildcats' Big East opponent Syracuse in the Fiesta Bowl). And judging by last season, the two new "automatics" aren't housing teams that will make a run for the national championship. At least not in 1998.

But wait — there's more.

Now Irish eyes are crying.

The new-new arrangement with the WAC and C-USA scared Notre Dame into thinking their old, old, old Alliance arrangement — a guaranteed Alliance bid if the team met certain guidelines — was null and void.

Dry your eyes, Fighting Irish. It appears the Alliance is into pampering those teams that still need Pampers.

The newest-of-the-new plans, which Sports Illustrated reports is likely to pass next month, guaranteed Notre Dame a bid if the team posts a 9-2 record or finished in the Top 10. A WAC or C-USA team would receive the other.

But just for kicks, let's see how this little scenario shakes out.

Michigan rolls into No. 1 again. K-State dominates its schedule (a.k.a. Nebraska) and sits at No. 2. Florida State winds up third, and Wyoming comes out to top the WAC and surprise the nation at No. 4. Arizona State overtakes UCLA in the PAC-10 and ends up fifth in the nation, with C-USA Cinderella story Southern Mississippi at No. 6. Florida, Virginia Tech and Nebraska follow at Nos. 7, 8 and 9, with Notre Dame riding in at No. 10.

Here we have the top two, who must meet to give the much-wanted official national championship game. FSU, Florida, ASU and Virginia Tech all receive automatic bids. By virtue of the new plan, Southern Miss and Wyoming would receive the at-large bids.

What happens to poor, lonely No. 10 Notre Dame?

Oh, and by the way, Michigan, K-State AND Florida State went undefeated.

Problem solved? Not by a long shot.

Stay tuned to the local maternity ward. You never know who's going to pop out crying next.

JO BYRNES MILLER, MIDDLE, DANCE INSTRUCTOR FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF SPEECH COMMUNICATION, THEATER AND DANCE, INSTRUCTS DANCERS OF SpringDance '98 DURING A REHEARSAL WEDNESDAY NIGHT IN MCCAIN AUDITORIUM. THE PERFORMANCE WILL BE AT 8 P.M. FRIDAY AND SATURDAY IN MCCAIN AUDITORIUM.

Gotta dance!

'SpringDance '98' to showcase variety of dance styles at McCain

STORY BY DIANA LEE • PHOTO BY IVAN KOZAR

Choreography and dance performed by students, faculty and a guest artist will provide a wide variety of styles representing ballet, jazz and modern dance at "SpringDance '98," at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday in McCain Auditorium.

"There are nine separate dances, so there is no story line for the entire evening," said Jo Byrnes Miller, dance instructor for the Department of Speech Communication, Theater and Dance.

Students who wished to have their choreography considered for inclusion in the program auditioned at the beginning of the year, so there are ideally a wide variety of pieces to select from, Miller said. One of the other pieces chosen this year is actually an adapted Classy Cats routine.

"One of our students who is a Classy Cat auditioned one of their dances this year. She reduced it down to be performed with nine members," Miller said. "It is very exciting for us to include this in our program."

Music choices for the evening range from patriotic to jazz to Jimmy Buffet, as well as live music, which is new to the program. In the past, prerecorded music has been the norm, Miller said.

"I've done a large group piece to Jimmy Buffet, and we are including live music by the University Percussion Ensemble. We're also having our large ballet piece set to a patriotic march, which is kind of unique," Miller said.

Students performing in the event are primarily enrolled in dance classes, although auditions are open to all students.

"Most of our cast takes dance classes, but they are not required to."

"The students picked for the technically difficult pieces are usually our students, but we try to include some pieces that non-students with some past dance training can perform in," Miller said.

Even people without experience in dance are welcome to come and experience SpringDance. Miller said all one needs is an open mind.

"A lot of people are afraid to come to dance events, because they're afraid they won't get it. If they can't become available to appreciate every single piece, there are nine separate ones, so there is no need to expect to get every single one."

"Each one is like a little separate show," Miller said.

UPC brings '80s to Union silver screen

CORBIN H. CRABLE
Kansas State Collegian

The Union Programming Council is bringing all the nostalgia of the 1980s to the big screen this month.

UPC's Feature Films Committee voted to make the month of April "80s month," during which a different film from the decade will be featured each weekend.

Michael Bishop, senior in computer science and UPC Feature Films chairman, said the month of April was selected mainly because it is the only month in which movies hadn't been selected to run.

"That was just the way our scheduling worked out," Bishop said.

Bishop also said that since his freshman year, students had requested an '80s film marathon. Three years later, Bishop's position on UPC makes him able to fulfill those requests.

"As feature films chairman, I made sure we were going to do it," he said.

Early in the semester, members of the Feature Films Committee named some of their favorite movies from the '80s and voted on them.

"We tried to pick all films that were typically '80s," Bishop said.

The result is a group of movies which Bishop said he hopes will draw students to Forum Hall and experience a blast from their past.

"I know most of us are children of the '80s and grew up with these movies," Bishop said. "Now we can see them on the big screen again."

More info?

"The Breakfast Club" will be shown the first weekend in April. "Risky Business" will be shown the second weekend, and "Ferris Bueller's Day Off" will conclude the month-long film festival. The movies will be shown Fridays at 7 and 9:30 p.m. and Sundays at 8 p.m. in Forum Hall.

Dear Cassie and Jack,
I have this great internship offer for the summer. The problem is the job is out of state. My boyfriend said he will break up with me if I go, even though I told him how much this job means to me. What should I do?

Needin' a job

Dear Needin',
What is his problem? Is he afraid you'll cheat on him?
Does he just want his freedom while you are gone?
Is he afraid of strong, successful women?

No matter what his reason, he is trying to control you, and that's a bad thing. Break up with him and work toward your future.

Best wishes,
Cassie

Dear Needin',
I've seen this type of person before. Heck, I've been that person before. Your boyfriend is looking for a reason to break up with you — plain and simple. If he is looking so desperately for a way out, then give it to him.

Good luck,

► DRY-CLEANING CHARGES STAY EQUAL FOR WOMEN, MEN.

JENNIFER LUCKE
Kansas State Collegian

Women don't pay any more than men to have their clothes dry cleaned.

At least not in Manhattan, owners and managers of Manhattan dry cleaners said.

"I've never charged more," said Darrel Penland, manager of Cinderella Dry Cleaners & Laundry. "They're always the same price."

Kansas State Attorney General Carla Stovall recently looked into the cost of dry cleaning.

The Consumer Protection Division conducted an investigation to discover if dry cleaners were charging more to clean women's clothing than men's.

Dry cleaners in several cities were investigated, and only two were found to charge more. In a second check, neither business was overcharging to clean women's shirts.

Penland said the difference in cost could be attributed to the fact that women tend to wear more dry-cleanable blouses. He said women wear rayons or silks that men don't usually wear. If a man brought in a silk shirt he would be charged the same price as a woman, Penland said.

"AS FAR AS THE DRY CLEANING, THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE IN THE PRICE."

DAVID WATAHA
owner, Wash Palace

David Wataha, owner of Wash Palace, said there is a misconception about women being overcharged for dry cleaning. He said women are not charged more to have their clothing dry cleaned.

"As far as the dry cleaning, there is no difference in the price," Wataha said.

Sometimes women's dry cleaning does cost a little bit more because the garments are silk or rayon, but there are a few other reasons women might be charged more, he said.

"There is a difference. Women's blouses have shoulder pads, even most of the ones that are washable. The women's blouses won't go on the shirt presses.

"Even sometimes some of the men's shirts are more expensive because they won't go on the presses," Wataha said.

Architect relishes producing work outside constraints of establishment

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

Arizona architect Will Bruder defies convention and any neat label critics have attempted to give him.

Originally trained as an artist, Bruder's eccentric personality was obvious when he spoke Tuesday night to an audience of architecture faculty and students in Union Forum Hall. Attacking architectural theorists and program-be-damned buildings, Bruder argued his case for an approach to design that includes both poetry and pragmatism.

"I like to look for the extraordinary in the ordinary," Bruder said. "I like to create the extraordinary with the ordinary."

Bruder is considered by many as a singular voice in architecture, an expressionist who follows a tradition of strong individualist, anti-theorist architects like Frank Lloyd Wright, Bruce Goff, Bart Prince and the Italian architect Carlo Scarpa. His contemporaries are regional voices in architecture, like Fay Jones of Thorn Crown Chapel fame in Arkansas or New Mexican architect Antoine Predock.

Throughout the nearly two-hour slide presentation, Bruder referred to the work of landscape artists. He deflated common beliefs that there are not good clients, craftspeople or enough money to accomplish good design.

"I believe architects work because of clients, not in spite of clients," Bruder said.

Bruder is most known for his celebrated design for the Phoenix Public Library, which opened in 1995 as a massive structure designed to resemble a mesa straddling a freeway. Bruder, after presenting some of his past residential projects, spent most of his lecture detailing the design and construction of the library, boasting several times that the project came in within the budget and has become a source of community pride.

"Hopefully, my architecture provides for people to reconsider the entire world around them," Bruder said.

The Phoenix Library, which uses simple materials of copper, steel, concrete and glass to great effect, is one of Bruder's largest projects and evident of his working style, which he describes as a "journey." For example, when he wanted to clad two exterior elevations in copper panels he went to an agriculture building manufacturer of metal sheds for the job, saving thousands of dollars in the process. It is this way of working Bruder describes as the "extraordinary in the ordinary."

Sharply criticizing the work in metal siding of Los Angeles architect Frank Gehry, Bruder said, "It's truly the vernacular material of America."

It became this common sense material with a logical use. It's not about shock. It's not about some guy in Venice, Calif., inventing some new 'ism.'"

Earlier, perhaps subtly referring to Gehry's new highly sculptural Guggenheim Museum Bilbao, Bruder said, "Sculpture is not architecture. I don't believe in style and fashion."

Bruder has an unconventional background, having received his bachelor's degree in sculpture from the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee before beginning years of self-training and apprenticeships to such architects as Gunnar Birkerts and Paolo Soleri. He was registered as an architect in 1974. The majority of his 400 commissions is in the West, with particularly notable buildings in the Phoenix area and in Jackson Hole, Wyo.

Bruder stressed that his architecture was for common people.

"I'm not interested in creating architecture that would take a Ph.D. in art history to explain. I'm interested in the simple, not the intellectual," he said.

CLASSIFIEDS

CLASSIFIED AD WRITING TIPS

► List items or services first. Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Bombing kills 1; Israel key suspect

ASSOCIATED PRESS

RAMALLAH, West Bank — Palestinian officials accused Israel on Wednesday of killing a man considered the chief Hamas bombmaker, saying the man was fatally shot before his body was placed near an explosives-rigged car that was detonated by remote control.

Israel categorically denied being involved, but Islamic militants vowed revenge, raising the specter of a new bombing campaign in Israel as the Jewish state prepared for the Passover holiday and 50th anniversary celebrations.

Israeli security forces were placed on heightened alert in response to the new threats. Hamas has carried out more than a dozen suicide bombings in Israel since 1994.

The murky story of Mohiyedine Sharif's death began Sunday night when a Fiat Uno rigged with about 110 pounds of explosives blew up in a garage in an industrial zone of Ramallah, an autonomous Palestinian city in the West Bank.

The blast reduced the car to a blackened, twisted heap of metal and leveled the garage in which it was hidden. A body, partially blown apart, was found next to the wreckage.

Palestinian officials initially said the body could not be identified and suggested the man was a Hamas activist killed when a car bomb intended for an attack in Israel blew up prematurely.

But on Wednesday, Palestinian police announced the body was that of Sharif, a 32-year-old electrical engineer and mastermind of several suicide bombings since 1995. Sharif has topped Israel's most-wanted list since taking the place of Yehiyeh Ayyash, the chief Hamas bombmaker who was killed by an explosives-rigged cellular phone in January 1996.

Engineering students clean letters on K-Hill

last year. This gave the organization the opportunity to erase graffiti from the letters, which was sometimes caused by Jayhawk fans.

"You get a few people that go up there and put their mark on it," Brin said. "It's nothing we can't handle."

Mithen said the letters have brought the community closer together, because the college and the city coexist so closely. She said the hill has been a popular place for students to picnic and relax.

"Whether they got on their bikes or rode a wagon, it was always a place to party — 19th-century style," she said.

Engineering students who clean the area use ropes tied around their waist to avoid falling down the almost 60-degree hill. In two hours, the group of about 40 can complete the job.

Donations and discounts from area businesses also are helpful in the annual event.

Brin said getting contributions from businesses to add an extra letter might be more difficult.

"I think the community probably feels that there is some other way to spend the money," Mithen said.

With such a hefty price tag to add a letter to the hill, Brin said additional funds would have to come from area businesses and possibly alumni. He said the money should probably go to something more useful.

"I think we should maintain what we have up there," he said.

"I feel like I have as much school spirit as anyone else, but if anyone was going to donate that much money, I think it would be more important to add a computer lab."

Court dismisses Jones' case due to lack of evidence

time.

Her employment records showed that she received regular raises — and Clinton's lawyers said one of her most serious allegations of ill treatment after the alleged incident was that she didn't receive flowers on Secretary's Day one year.

The judge took note that Jones continued to work at the Arkansas Industrial Development Commission for another 19 months and never filed a formal complaint or told her supervisors of the incident.

"The court has determined that her quid pro quo and hostile work environment sexual harassment claim are without merit and warrant a grant of summary judgment," the judge said.

The judge wrote that whatever went on in the hotel room, it "was brief and isolated; did not result in any physical harm ... did not result in distress so severe that no reasonable person could be expected to endure it."

She also dismissed the portion of the lawsuit against state trooper Danny Ferguson, who allegedly set up the meeting during a state economic conference Clinton attended.

The judge's decision culminates a dramatic month in which the lawsuit erupted into battle of contentious and sensational legal maneuvers.

Stepping up the pressure, Jones' lawyers released hundreds of pages of evidence about other alleged affairs, included an unsubstantiated allegation of a sexual assault.

Clinton's lawyer countered by charging Jones' case was garbage designed to gain sensational headlines without proving her case.

As a precursor to her ruling, Wright admonished lawyers about their conduct on Tuesday.

where people were found guilty of involuntary manslaughter for owning killer dogs, but to his knowledge, there had never been a murder conviction for a dog mauling.

The language of Kansas' second-degree murder law allows courts to convict on the unintentional charge if "extreme indifference to human life" could be proven, Biggs said.

Sabine Davidson remains free on a $50,000 appeal bond and awaits the appointment of a new attorney for her appeal, Biggs said.
